THE STATE'S NEW RULERS

THE PRELIMINARY CONTEST FOR THE SPEAKERSHIP.

THE PRINCIPAL CANDIDATES SURE IN THEIR STRENGTH—ASSEMBLYMEN HESITATING TO EXPRESS THEIR PREFERENCES—THE CANDIDATES FOR CLERK OF THE SENATE COUNTING THEIR FRIENDS.

ALBANY, Jan. 2.—A year ago to-day and the Speakership fight, which resulted in Alvord's election, had begun in very bitter earnest, and under circumstances quite different from those under which the present contest is being carried on. The ground was occupied by a large band of the friends of Mr. Sloan. Mr. Alvord's adherents were few and far between until a day later. The members of the Assembly who had reached the capital were outspoken in their preferences. It was a simple thing to ascertain by a canvass just what the prospect of any candidate was at a given hour. Toward the last a few men became less positive in their professions for Mr. Sloan, and it was afterward plain that they found out in the caucus that they considered Mr. Alvord their choice. A good many of the men who found themselves in the minority of the Republicans were disappointed, and naturally so, to find that the price of their opposition to Speaker Alvord was a place at the foot of some committee-list. It may be that the experience of these gentlemen, or of some of them, at least, has made them cautious. At all events, the members of the Assembly of 1880 are not so willing as their predecessors were to say what they think, whether or not they have made up their minds. Up to this morning it has been a difficult thing to find half a dozen men who would say flatly whether they were for Sharpe, or Husted, or Skinner, or Terry. Two men have declared for Baker, and this declaration is looked upon very much as Mr. Baker's candidacy is—in the light of a joke.

If one is to believe what the friends of each of the four principal candidates say, there can be no doubt that a majority of the Republican members have led four gentlemen to believe that a vote is pledged to each of them by Republicans enough to elect them.

While the canvass is likely to be animated before it is ended, it promises to be free from bitterness. The merits of the candidates are discussed with more pleasure than their shortcomings are. One hears nothing spoken of Gen. Sharpe, for instance, that the candidate would be annoyed to hear. If anything critical is uttered, it may be the suggestion, by a friend of another candidate, that perhaps Gen. Sharpe has not had Legislative experience enough to enable him to hold the Assembly in rein after a part of the Republicans had been disappointed about the committee appointments. Speaking with a member from a western county, an outspoken friend of Charles R. Skinner, he said that he had made Mr. Skinner his choice because he was sure that, if elected, Mr. Skinner would make up the committees with some regard for the interests of the people, and not entirely for the corporations, and that he could be trusted to carry out every promise he made. He added that he did not believe he would make any promises that he ought not to give. Gen. Husted's friends see no candidate in the field that appears to them to possess experience enough to manage the House successfully, and they go so far as to predict a state of chaotic confusion if either of his opponents is chosen. There is not a little anxiety manifested to learn what position Gov. Cornell has taken. The intimate friends of the Governor, when asked who the Governor prefers, say that he has not indicated his preference to anybody, and that he will keep his hands off and allow the best man to win. This would seem to be conclusive; but if one drops into conversation with men who are very warm admirers of the Governor, they will find in a very few minutes that a dozen reasons are given for preferring Gen. Sharpe. It is suggested, perhaps, that Gen. Husted has been Speaker so many times that he ought to be willing to give way for another; or, perhaps, some intimation will be thrown out that the Rockland member could not be depended upon to name important committees in such a way as to inspire confidence that he intended to be impartial. Mr. Skinner's strength will be depreciated, and Mr. Terry's canvass spoken of with as much indifference as that of Mr. Baker, and the summing up will be that Gen. Sharpe is a "good fellow" and "ought to have it."

As for the way the "cat will jump"—how the balance of power will go—it is a difficult matter to find out at present. Until more members are ready to declare for whom they will vote, it would be unsafe to say how voters will go when they abandon their first choice. It does not seem probable that any candidate will be able to deliver his friends to anybody else. It was reported to-day that in case Gen. Sharpe was found to be gaining strength, and it was possible to effect a junction of the supporters of Husted and Skinner, to elect either of these two, that the junction could be effected. Again, it has been said, by idlers, who circulate all sorts of reports here, that Terry and Husted were working together for Husted, and that the forces of Skinner and Sharpe would combine for the latter, if it was found that such a combination could be effected. These reports ring the changes on nearly all probable combinations. The candidates disclaim any knowledge of them, although none of them are unwilling to accept recruits.

Having dragged all day long, the Speakership fight became more lively at night. Upon the arrival of new members, and after a new canvass to ascertain their preferences, it seems altogether probable that Gen. Sharpe will be the next Speaker, unless a very marked change should be effected in the leanings of members. Nearly all the old members are for him, and as they come in and their choice becomes known the ranks of the Sharpe men are rapidly filling up with recruits. There seems to be a common understanding that Gen. Sharpe's election will please the Governor, and not a few men look upon his success as being at once a grand Conkling and Cornell victory. Gen. Husted does not at all give up the fight, but expects to win, and talks as confidently as ever.

Mr. Alvord arrived to-night. The TIMES correspondent called upon him in his rooms at the Stanwix, and after the first greeting said: "They say you are out of the race, Mr. Alvord."

"Out of the race! Not a bit of it. I am in first, last, and all the time, and I am going to be elected."

"But have you any pledges?"

"Pledges! Of course I have. I've got more strength than any of the other candidates, and I am going to win. Why, I am sure of 25 votes."

"It is said the machine has another candidate, and that you cannot win."

"Do they? Well, I'm against the machine. If the Speaker is to be elected on the Grant boom, I'm against the machine. The interests of this State cannot be neglected for any such purpose. I'm with the party, whoever may be nominated for President. If the Speaker is to be elected on the Grant shout, and Grant is to be nominated, it is my opinion that two mistakes will be committed."

The Sharpe men are so confident at midnight that they declare their belief that all the candidates except Skinner and Husted will be out of the race to-morrow. Mr. Skinner's side strenuously deny this notion, and Mr. Husted considers such talk as the merest "bounce." Congressman Hiscock has been here to-day, but he has taken no part in the contest. Ex-Congressman Davy is one of the most active friends of Gen. Sharpe here. The interest in the canvass is now at all intense to-night, and the halls of the hotels were deserted before midnight.

In the contest next in interest to that for the Speakership—that for Clerk of the Senate—the friends of both contestants, and there are only two, are equally confident. Mr. Vrooman himself regards his election as settled beyond a doubt. A canvass made here this morning showed that he has 12 Senators beyond dispute, and probably there are others who are claimed by Mr. Glidden's friends. Senator Bunnell has expressed his intention to support Vrooman. Senator Wagner is here, and he is working for Mr. Vrooman vigorously. The other Senators who are counted for Vrooman are Rockwell, Lord, Robertson, Fenton, Schroeder, Mills, Helmer, McCarthy, Davenport, Williams, Loomis, and Sandford. Lord, Rockwell, McCarthy, and Sandford are pronounced in their friendship. Senators Lynde and Wandover hesitate to express themselves, and are claimed by both sides. Senator Lynde says he "is awaiting developments." Mr. Glidden does not say who he expects will vote for him, but is confident that he has a majority of the Senators in his favor. Senator Lord, who has been claimed by both sides, arrived this morning, and assured Mr. Vrooman that he could depend upon his (Lord's) vote if it was the only one cast for him. The Senators not heard from, and who are expected to vote for Mr. Glidden, are Eidman, Strahan, Astor, Madden, Baker, Braman, Winslow, Woodin, and Pitts.

NOTES FROM THE STATE-HOUSE.

ALBANY, Jan. 2.—State Treasurer Wendell took possession of his department this morning, and, after an examination of the accounts as transferred, he reports them as correct. This decision does away with the reports published concerning an alleged deficiency caused by the carelessness of his predecessor.

Controller Wadsworth was in his office attending to his duties and receiving the congratulations of many friends who called upon him.

Attorney-General Ward, who had spent a great part of New Year's Day in discussing with Mr. Schoonmaker the affairs of the Law Department, was in his comfortable office, ready for business.

In the Secretary of State's office, on New Year's Day, Gen. Carr and his Deputy and clerks found on their respective desks vases and bouquets of flowers, gifts from the outgoing to the incoming officers.

Gov. Cornell has made the following appointments: Private Secretary—Henry E. Abell, of Nyack, Rockland County; Executive Clerks—Edward Moggsel, of Albany; Thomas Newcomb, of Ithaca, and Samuel A. Low, of Albany; Stenographer—William C. Humphrey, of New-York City; Military Messenger—Stephen A. Smith, of New-York City. The appointment of Military Secretary has been offered to Dwight Lawrence, of New-York City, but it is stated that he hesitates to accept, as he will thereby have to resign his present place as Superintendent of Foreign Mails in the New-York Post Office.

EXTENSIVE FIRE IN RED BANK.

SEVERAL BUILDINGS DESTROYED BY A SUPPOSED INCENDIARY FIRE—LOSSES AND INSURANCE.

RED BANK, N.J., Jan. 2.—The social gayeties of New Year's night were broken in upon in this place by what proved vastly more exciting—an extensive fire. About 7:15 o'clock flames were seen issuing from Naftal's clothing store, at Front and Broad streets. All of the places of business in the town were closed, and their owners were engaged in celebrating the holiday. An alarm was sounded, and the local fire company responded promptly, but the building was old and dry, and the fire spread rapidly. The adjoining building on the southern side was soon enveloped in flames, and its occupant, Malchow, a barber, was glad to escape with his life, losing his household effects. William H. Conrow's restaurant next caught fire, and merchants and business men generally arrived at the conclusion that the conflagration was likely to be a disastrous one, and began to remove their stocks of goods to places of safety. The flames illuminated the sky and were visible miles away, so that the residents of the surrounding country poured into town to witness the unusual sight.

The old store occupied by W. A. French & Co., being dry and inflammable, was quickly ablaze, and for a short time it seemed as if the property across Broad and Front streets must be consumed. The firemen and a volunteer brigade of bucket-men, however, drenched the Post Office, Parker & Chadwick's, Weaver's, Spinner's, and other buildings in those streets, which checked the progress of the flames in that direction. The water supply gave out just before the fire reached French's store, and rendered it a matter of impossibility to save the building or the office of the Western Union Telegraph Company, which adjoined it. The instruments and papers of the latter office were saved. On the northern side stood the stately mansion of Mrs. Coombs, which was separated from the burning pile by a narrow alley. Unusual efforts were made to save the handsome building, which were successful, and the fire was thus checked in that direction, and the Globe Hotel, and several other costly buildings were saved from destruction. In the meantime, the fire was spreading southward, and in a few moments the brick building occupied as a butcher's shop by George W. Stilwell, and Theodore F. White's grocery store, were destroyed. Next in line was a wooden building occupied by W. T. Corlies as a clothing store. To save the adjoining warehouses, it was thought best to tear down this building, and thus the fire was stopped as it reached Miller's shoe store. The latter building was built of brick, with a wooden extension in the rear. The extension was partially destroyed, but the front part remained intact. At this point the conflagration ended. Fortunately, the wind was light during the progress of the fire, as, owing to the inadequacy of the Fire Department, the entire town must have been destroyed had a gale prevailed. The firemen and citizens did their best with a small chemical engine and buckets.

It was at first supposed that the fire was caused by an overheated stove in the Naftal clothing store, but the Police assert that they found clothing saturated with gasoline, and they suspect that the place was fired by an incendiary. An investigation is being made. The total loss is estimated at $35,000. The insurances, as far as they have been ascertained, are as follows: G. W. Stilwell, building and fixtures, $5,300; Simon Miller, $2,500 on stock, $4,000 on building; Theodore F. White, $2,500 on stock; John Sutton, on building occupied by W. T. Corlies, $1,000; W. A. French & Co., on stock, $6,000; Mrs. A. E. Gardner, $600, on stock and furniture; Naftal, tailor, on stock and household effects, $2,600; A. Reckless, old store, insured; building owned by Parker & Chadwick, occupied by Naftal, insured, $800. The heaviest loser was Anthony Reckless, President of the Long Branch Railroad Company, who owned the block at Broad and Front streets, occupied by the Western Union Telegraph Company and W. A. French & Co. The building was one of the landmarks, and was erected in 1827. It was occupied for many years by Mr. Reckless. The fire was visible at Long Branch as early as 8 P. M., and the several fire companies, having received permission from the Mayor to go to Red Bank in case their services were required, remained in their engine-houses until they were given notice that they would not be needed.

The following-named insurance companies have outstanding policies on the burned property to the appended amounts: Ætna, Hartford, $2,000; Lancashire, England, $1,000; Merchants', New-York, $200; La Caisse Generale, France, $500; Humboldt, $500; Germania, $100; National, New-York, $100; Star, New-York, $300; Newark City, $100; Franklin, $100; Royal, England, $100; Continental, $400; New-York City, $2,800. About $15,000 more is distributed among the following companies: German-American, Home, of New-York; Phenix, of Brooklyn; Fire Association, of Philadelphia; Scottish Commercial, of Glasgow; Westchester, and Tradesmen's.

VIRGINIA'S NEW STATE OFFICERS.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 2.—The new State officers, recently elected by the Readjusters of the General Assembly, took charge of their respective offices in the Capitol to-day. These are: Secretary of Commonwealth—T. T. Fauntleroy; Auditor of Public Accounts—John E. Massey; Second Auditor—H. H. Dixon; Treasurer—Corbin M. Reynolds; Superintendent of Public Printing—M. F. Walker. The clerical force in the office of the First Auditor is almost entirely new, but the appointments are only temporary. No changes have yet been made in the other offices, and it is not likely any will be made until after the reassembling of the Legislature on Jan. 6, as the new officers are virtually bound by caucus action, before their nomination, to appoint the patronage of their various offices among the Congressional districts in accordance with the determination of the committee to which the whole matter was referred. This condition was well known and understood, and every officer took his place subject to it.

THE USURPING DEMOCRATS

AWAITING A DECISION ON GOV. GARCELON'S QUESTIONS.

TWO COUNTED-IN FUSIONISTS RESIGN—THE SUPREME COURT IN SESSION—A GREENBACK LEADER'S VIEWS—MILITARY GUARD AT THE CAPITOL.

PORTLAND, Jan. 2.—It is understood that Nathan Cleaves, Past Judge of Probate, and a Democratic candidate counted in, qualified this morning to save a complication and immediately resigned. Other Democratic candidates also qualified. The Register of Probate, Caleb Chaplin, of Harrison, holds on; W. B. Skillin, County Commission, does the same. It was thought that A. F. Moulton, County Attorney, would resign, but he has entered upon his duties, and has made no sign of resigning.

Ex-Senator Morrill in an interview said that he considered Gov. Garcelon's questions evasive, but thought the court would answer the real questions.

SKOWHEGAN, Me., Jan. 2.—Col. Daniel Snow, of this town, the Fusion Representative to the Legislature, to whom a certificate of election has been given, refuses to accept.

BANGOR, Jan. 2.—Chief-Justice Appleton, Judge Peters and Judge Libbey were in this city on Thursday, when the questions framed by Gov. Garcelon arrived here. Judge Burrows and Judge Walton came last night, Judge Danforth and Judge Symonds this morning, so the full court is now in session. It is expected that it will complete its labors to-morrow.

AUGUSTA, Jan. 2.—Gen. Joshua L. Chamberlain, chosen last Winter Major-General of the Maine Militia, and commissioned, is here for the purpose of being qualified, which will be done to-day before a Justice of the Peace. All is quiet.

Solon Chase, the leader of the Greenbackers of the State of Maine, was interviewed by a representative of the Associated Press this evening, with the following result:

Mr. Chase—It has been reported that you do not favor the count-out?

A.—Well, I never favor anything that is wrong, and if any wrong has been committed, and I don't say there has been, then, of course, I don't approve of it.

Q.—How do your people feel about this matter?

A.—The Republicans are, of course, indignant; but outside of that party the people are willing to trust the regularly constituted authorities. Nothing else can be done, as far as I can see.

Q.—What is the remedy for the people if they have been wronged?

A.—The people's great tribunal, the Legislature, which is superior to and above the Governor and Council. I think the Governor and Council have performed their duty honestly and conscientiously, and if they have done wrong it has not been intentional. There are different ways in looking at a statutory law and in interpreting it. The Executive may be misinstructed, but these may be rectified by the courts.

Q.—Will all the counted-in members answer to the roll-call on the first day of the session?

A.—I certainly think so. Members counted in should feel under obligations to come here and take their seats and vote. Even though they might feel a little doubtful about the people sending them here, that would not prevent them from acting honestly. I believe that there is a good deal of common sense yet left in the breasts of the people.

Mr. Chase seemed to put great emphasis on the idea that the people must not forget that they owe allegiance to the regularly-constituted authorities. His position on these matters is regarded as one of much importance, as he is an acknowledged leader in the Greenback Party. It is reported that he will remain here until after the organization, and do his best to bring the Greenbackers into line.

The presence in this city of Col. Spurling, which has been the subject of no little comment and speculation, has no significance whatever as bearing upon the matters at issue. He was here from Chicago to visit his children, who reside in the eastern part of the State.

The military force is still kept at the State-house, being on duty during the night, but not in the day-time. To-night several persons went to the State-house on business, but were refused admission, not having the countersign. A gentleman who preceded them advanced to the outer door, giving three knocks. The guard within inquired, "Who comes?" The reply was made, "A friend." "Advance and give the countersign," was heard. "W. P. Low," was the answer, and the gentleman entered, while an arsenal guard closed the doors on others who were without the countersign. It may be well to state here, on the best authority, that no military company, or other organized body, has been raised to resist the State authorities, nor will there be. To-morrow is the day fixed upon for the gathering here of the Fusion members. It is thought that few will respond, as most of them will remain at their homes over Sunday. The Hon. W. P. Frye is expected to-morrow. Officers at the State-house have not shown a disposition to accept the city's tender of a Police force, but will employ men of their own selection.

Col. A. W. Wilder, of Skowhegan, was to-day renominated by the Governor as Railroad Commissioner, he having held the office about 15 years. The nomination seems to be distasteful to the Council, who, it is said, will not confirm him.

Gov. Garcelon returned to the city this afternoon.

SOCIALIST POLITICAL MOVEMENTS.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Jan. 2.—The Socialistic congress held its last session here yesterday. Delegate T. C. Brophy, of Boston, in the chair. An animated debate took place on the report of the Committee on a Platform, which, after several amendments had been made, was adopted. The preamble and platform do not differ from those adopted at Newark, N. J., in 1877. The question of nominating a candidate for President came up at the evening session, and was opposed by P. J. McGuire, of St. Louis; Mr. Winter, of New-York, and others, and was advocated by A. R. Parsons, of Chicago, and T. C. Brophy, of Boston. After fourhours of heated discussion, Messrs. Parsons and Brophy carried their point. Caleb Pink, of Kings County, N. Y.; A. E. Bishop, of Chicago, and Osborn Ward were selected, and these will be referred to the party, the two names receiving the highest number of votes to be the candidates for President and Vice-President. Messrs. McGuire, of St. Louis; Van Patten, of Cincinnati; Wagner, of Brooklyn, and Winter, of St. Louis, persistently advocated a coalition, and charges were made during the session that an attempt was being made to "sell out."

GEN. GRANT IN SAVANNAH.

SAVANNAH, GA., Jan. 2.—Gen. Grant held a reception this morning at the City Exchange. A number of old West Pointers, citizens, and colored people called. The city authorities gave the party an excursion down the river to below Fort Jackson. In the afternoon the party was taken to Bonaventure Thunderbolt. In the evening Gens. Grant, and Sheridan, and Fred. Grant dined at the residence of Gen. H. R. Jackson, and met Gens. McLaws, Wayne, Lawton, and other Army officers. At night the Aldermen gave a Serenade to Gen. Grant at the Screven House. The ex-President responded briefly, acknowledging the compliment and regretting his short stay in Savannah. The party will leave here at 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon for Florida.

HAVANA, Jan. 2.—The Cuban authorities are making arrangements to give Gen. Grant a fitting reception. Captain-General Blanco being absent from the city, he has ordered his confidential Adjutant to receive Gen. Grant and tender him the hospitalities of the palace, where apartments are being prepared for his reception.

A SAVINGS BANK CLOSING.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Jan. 2.—The Capital Savings Bank suspended this morning. The bank is said to be solvent, but purposes going out of business. It promises to pay a first dividend of 10 per cent. on the principal to depositors on Jan. 10, and on the same day 4 per cent. on the interest account for the last six months. Other payments will be made as the assets are realized upon.

THE PENAL CODE OF UTAH.

HOW A MORMON LAW REACTED ON MORMONS AND HOW IT WAS REPEALED.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—It is expected that Gov. Emery, of Utah, will arrive in this city to-morrow, as he left Salt Lake City Dec. 29, and that the President will not appoint his successor until the Governor shall have had an opportunity to refute, among other charges, the serious one that he signed the repeal of the law punishing "offenses against chastity, morality, and decency," friends of Gov. Emery having denied that he had anything to do with the repeal of such a law.

A representative of THE TIMES called to-night on Mr. James H. Mandeville, an attorney who has had occasion to become acquainted with the facts in the case, and was given a history of the law, with the circumstances attending its removal from the Utah statutes. This law was approved March 6, 1852, and it may be found on page 186 of the acts, resolutions, and Memorials passed at the several annual sessions of the Legislative Assembly of Utah Territory, which were first published by virtue of an act approved Jan. 10, 1855. The law consisted of 12 titles. In the third title it was substantially provided that adultery should be punished by imprisonment of from 3 to 10 years, or by a fine of from $300 to $1,000, or by both, in the discretion of the court. If one of the parties was married, then both were guilty of adultery. The cohabitation of unmarried persons, and open or gross lewdness on the part of persons married or unmarried, were to be punished by imprisonment of from 6 months to 10 years, and a fine of from $100 to $1,000. The punishment for keeping a house of ill-repute was imprisonment for not more than 10 years, or a fine of $500, or both. This law was enacted by the Mormons, but the Gentiles in later years began to prosecute the Mormons under it, and for self-protection the latter undertook its repeal. It has been said that the appeal was effected by other agency than that of Gov. Emery. The facts are as follows: In order to get rid of the obnoxious law, the Mormons avoided passing any act directly repealing it, but they ingeniously effected a repeal by making a civil and a criminal code for the Territory. These codes are embraced in a single volume, entitled, "Compiled Laws of Utah, 1876." The codification of the laws of Utah was authorized by an act of its Legislature, which was approved by Gov. Emery, Feb. 16, 1876. It would have been too barefaced a deed to have left out the law of 1852 entirely, so the Mormons left some of its provisions in the Penal Code, for the 12 titles related to offenses against the Territory, the lives and persons of individuals, property, larceny, forgery, and counterfeiting, public justice, malicious mischief, public health, public peace, justifiable killing, and a general definition of offenses; but for the offenses against chastity, morality, and decency they substituted under chapter 1 certain provisions against rape, abduction, and seduction. The punishment, as fixed by the code, was not so severe as under the law of 1852. Section 2,229 repealed the act in relation to crimes and punishments, approved March 18, 1852. The Committee of Codification completed its labors Nov. 28, 1876, and on the following day the Secretary of the Territory made his certificate, following the act authorizing the codification, and which may be found next following the title-page of the Code.

LOUISVILLE AND NASHVILLE PLANS.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Jan. 2.—At the regular monthly meeting of the Board of Directors of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company to-day a dividend of 3 per cent. from the earnings of the current six months was declared, payable Feb. 1. A Director of the Louisville and Nashville says of its prosperity: "The earnings for the past six months were equivalent to a 5 per cent. dividend upon the capital stock, and but for the yellow fever epidemic would have been 7 per cent. The business of the road is unparalleled, and the rolling stock is inadequate to move the immense volume of business offering. It will require at least two months to clear the road of accumulated local freight waiting shipment." The Board of Directors also authorized a subscription to complete the Richmond and Three Forks Railroad, opening up the finest iron and coal region in Kentucky. The counties traversed by this road have already subscribed an amount which, in conjunction with the subscription expected from the Louisville and Nashville Road and the City of Louisville, assures the completion of this road at an early date. It is stated that the work upon the road will be rapidly pushed to completion.

A BALTIMORE WAREHOUSE BURNED.

SEVERAL THOUSAND BALES OF COTTON ON FIRE—LOSS ESTIMATED AT OVER $100,000.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 2.—A fire broke out at 8:30 o'clock last night in Baltimore in the four-story warehouse of Thurston & Harrison, Buchanan's Wharf, containing several thousand bales of cotton. The entire Fire Department was called out, but owing to the position of the warehouse on Buchanan's Wharf, between two docks, and bounded by very narrow streets, not more than four or five engines could be brought to bear effectively upon the fire. Several daring firemen who ventured in the building were overcome by suffocation, but were rescued.

At midnight the fire is still burning fiercely. Soon after 11 o'clock the two and walls fell from the fourth floor, and an hour later the whole of the rear wall fell. The steam-tug Convoy, of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, was brought into the dock and turned effective streams on the fire. The damage will exceed $100,000, the greater part of which is insured.

SHOT BY A BROTHER-IN-LAW.

AN ENCOUNTER GROWING OUT OF AN OFFENSIVE DEMAND FOR MONEY.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Jan. 2.—The shooting of W. H. H. Adams last night by his brother-in-law, ex-Mayor Harris, was the result of a family feud. A short time before midnight, on his way home, Harris entered a saloon in Seventh-street, near Central-avenue, but on seeing Adams he retired. The latter followed him and demanded money in an offensive and profane manner. Harris refused, and gave his opinion that his brother-in-law was an ungrateful scoundrel. Whereupon Adams felled him with a blow from a heavy cane. Harris then drew a pistol and fired squarely at Adams's head, the ball penetrating his left cheek, fracturing the upper jawbone, and lodging in the opposite side of the mouth, inflicting a painful but not dangerous wound. The men were taken to their homes. Harris, when told that Adams was not mortally wounded, said it would have been a good riddance to the community if the ball had been better directed. Harris won national reputation as Colonel in an Ohio regiment during the war, and he served two terms as Mayor. He claims that for 20 years he has been supporting Adams and his family, in the face of public opinion, for which the only gratitude has been increased demands for money.

CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO LITIGATION.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 2.—A bill was filed to-day in the United States Circuit Court, Judge Bond, against the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, praying for the appointment of a Receiver and an injunction against the present management of the canal. The suit is brought in the name of Daniel K. Stewart, a preferred bondholder, and sets forth that the act of the General Assembly of Maryland of 1878, chapter 58, was invalid, and the mortgage and bonds issued under that act are null and void as against him and the other holders of preferred bonds, because the act of 1878 takes from the said preferred bondholders the security for the payment of their bonds acquired under previous acts of the Assembly. The bill also charges mismanagement by the President and Directors of the canal company in the application of its funds, and asks that they be enjoined from exercising any of the powers, functions, and franchises of the corporation, and from issuing any bonds under the act of 1878. Judge Bond appointed the first Monday of February for the hearing. The counsel representing the complainant are Messrs. Marshal & Fisher, Johnson & Poe, and Archibald Stirling, Jr., of this city, and Joseph Bryan, of Richmond, Va. The State of Maryland is interested more largely in the canal than any other party, having more than $30,000,000 in it.

AFFAIRS IN FOREIGN LANDS

THE FRENCH POLITICAL CHANGES.

THE GERMAN AND PAPAL AMBASSADORS CONGRATULATE M. DE FREYCINET—REGRET AT THE CHANGE IN THE BERLIN MISSION.

PARIS, Jan. 2.—At President Grévy's reception to the diplomatic representatives on New Year's Day, Prince Hohenlohe, the German Ambassador at Paris, addressing M. De Freycinet, the new President of the Council and Minister of Foreign Affairs, in a loud tone said: "I am charged by Prince Bismarck to tell you, in the name of my Government, that notwithstanding the regret we feel at the departure of Count de St. Vallier from Berlin, we see no reason why our relations with the present Cabinet should not bear the impress of the same sentiments of cordiality and peace we felt and manifested with regard to the preceding Cabinet. I may add, for my own part, that I rejoice to be the bearer of these words, which exactly harmonize with the feelings of esteem I cherish toward yourself, and to enter into official relations with you, thus performing an agreeable and reassuring mission."

The Papal Nuncio, addressing M. De Freycinet, said: "I rejoice to see placed at the head of the Cabinet a man whose broad and conciliatory views, lofty character, and sentiments of toleration are well known, on whom we can rely to wield power in the most equitable and sincerely liberal manner, and in whom we are certain to find a strictly impartial support."

M. De Freycinet in the course of his reply said that he cherished no hostility to the Catholic religion; that he profoundly respected it; he only wished to remove it from too close contact with political affairs, so as to rescue it from confusion which might paralyze its efforts and create difficulties and embarrassments and cause regrets. M. De Freycinet is a Protestant.

THE SITUATION IN THE EAST.

SETTLEMENT OF MINISTER LAYARD'S CONTROVERSY WITH THE PORTE—THE GUISINI TROUBLE.

LONDON, Jan 2.—A dispatch from Vienna says: "From a long conference between Sir Austen Layard, British Ambassador, and the Turkish Minister of Foreign Affairs, it is concluded that the differences growing out of the affair of the German missionary and the condemned priest have been nearly settled."

A correspondent at Constantinople says: "Sir Austen Layard, the British Ambassador here, had a long interview with the Sultan on Wednesday last. It is understood that Ahmed Tawfik, the Mohammedan priest, will be liberated, and that Mr. Koeller, the German missionary, will have his papers returned. A written, but not formal, apology will be made for the Porte's illegal acts. Minister Layard will waive his demand for the dismissal of the Minister of Police on receiving assurance that he was not responsible for the arrests."

Reuter's Constantinople dispatch confirms the above account of the interview on Wednesday between Minister Layard and the Sultan. The priest, Ahmed Tewfik, will be removed temporarily to a town in the interior, to secure him against possible violence. The Minister of Police has given satisfactory explanations regarding the treatment of Mr. Koeller and the priest.

The Porte has sent a dispatch to its representatives abroad, denying the statement telegraphed on Dec. 25, from Vienna, to the effect that the Albanians were expressing their dissatisfaction at the cession of Gusinje and Plava to Montenegro, by plundering and burning Greek churches and the houses of Christians in Prizrend. The dispatch says that, on the contrary, perfect order reigns in Prizrend and in the towns nearest to the Montenegrin frontier.

CAIRO, Jan. 2.—Gordon Pasha has arrived here.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—A Vienna correspondent says that notwithstanding the assertion of the Porte to the contrary, the priest, Ahmed Tewfik, has been sentenced to death—not by the ordinary Judges, but by an ecclesiastical tribunal. The Prefect of Police has voluntarily resigned.

Reuter's Constantinople dispatch announces that diplomatic relations between the Porte and Great Britain will probably be resumed on Saturday.

WIESBADEN, Jan. 2.—The rivers Rhine and Main are swollen in consequence of ice blocking their currents. The towns of Russelsheim, Kostheim, Floersheim, and Rudesheim are inundated. There is great alarm in the neighboring districts.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—A dispatch from Paris says: "The flood in the Seine is becoming very serious. Great blocks of floating ice have made a clean breach of 200 feet in the temporary wooden bridge opposite the Invalides. The river is still rising fast."

A Vienna correspondent reports that the danger from the flood in the Danube is increasing. The merchants are trying to carry their corn to places of safety. The towns of Krems and Stein, both on the Danube, have been partly flooded. Thousands of people were watching Thursday night and Friday, expecting the river to flood Vienna.

CRIME AND ITS RESULTS.

PROCEEDINGS IN CRIMINAL CASES—OFFENSES REPORTED YESTERDAY.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—Miss Lucy W. R. Horton, who shot John H. Morgan, son of Senator Morgan, of Alabama, yesterday, was arraigned in the Police Court this morning. Mr. Morgan not being able to appear on account of his injury, the case was continued, and Miss Horton was released on giving bonds in the sum of $1,000. Mrs. Belva A. Lockwood became her surety.

Collector Young telegraphs Commissioner Raum from Raleigh, N. C., to-day as follows: "General Deputies Sorrell and Moore report the capture of three illicit distilleries in Moore County, yesterday, run by Bryan and Ritter, James D. Thomas and James Cockburn. The Ritters attacked our guide at his house after the departure of the Deputies. A conflict ensued, and a brother of our guide cut one of the assailants about the face."

Collector Clark telegraphs from Atlanta as follows: "The Deputies report the seizure of 2 illicit rum and 4 grain distilleries, 2 horses, wagon, 10 gallons of spirits, and the destruction of large quantities of beer, mash, and spirits. The affairs in the district are unchanged, and the outlaws are still defiant."

LEAVENWORTH, Kan., Jan. 2.—Thomas O. Thurston killed W. W. Embry yesterday afternoon. Embry was the man who shot Col. Anthony, of the Leavenworth Times, about four years ago. He and Thurston were partners in the publication of a Sunday paper, which is in business troubles. They had been quarreling for a week, having had each other arrested on counter charges of embezzlement. Thurston was playing cards in a saloon yesterday afternoon, when Embry, having given bail on his arrest, entered and approached the table. Thurston drew a revolver and shot him through the heart, so that he died inside of three hours. Thurston was arrested, and boasts that he shot in self-defense, because he believed Embry intended to kill him.

VAN WERT, Ohio, Jan. 2.—An attempt was made by Sheriff Stith, Constable Redrup, and two others last night to arrest the men suspected of the murder of Bernard Kaufman, at Delphos, on Christmas Eve, the murderers securing $1,500 after having tortured Mrs. Pickens until she disclosed its hiding place. When the Sheriff entered a house to make the arrest, he recognized Christ. Grosserman, with two strangers, and demanded their surrender. Grosserman drew a revolver and shot the Sheriff twice in the arm and once in the hand. He then turned out the lights, and a general firing began, the Sheriff receiving two shots in his breast, and Redrup two, one of which, in the left breast, went through his body, causing a mortal wound. Grosserman and one man escaped, but the third was captured, he refused to give his name. On search being made $400 in silver were found in his valise, and between $400 and $500 in currency among his clothes. The officers are certain that they were on the right track. Sheriff Stith's recovery is doubtful, and Redrup's death is certain.

NEW-BRUNSWICK, N. J., Jan. 2.—Jo

I had wanted to. The reason why I didn't talk to them was because I feared I would have to go upon the stand and testify. Supposing I had told them one story and then gone the other side of the fence and told another?"

"I should say it was evidence of guilt, if you ask me," said Mr. Jones, who then asked: "Are you ready to swear that you have stated all the conversation you had with these gentlemen?"

"I don't recollect anything more."

"You said nothing to them men about a black oak club?"

"Not that I recollect."

The witness was cross-examined at length concerning the circumstances of Hayden's call at the Stannard house on the morning of the day of the homicide, under which he did not deviate materially from his original statement. He swore positively that he had no such conversation with Hayden that day, as the latter had testified to. He said that on the morning of the homicide he gave Mary $5 with which to buy provisions at the store. She had been counting out the change to him in the front room just before Hayden's arrival. He had eaten and slept at the Stannards' when ever he pleased for about two years. He frequently furnished provisions for the house without making any charge for them. He might have told Mary she would find blackberries up by Big Rock. He knew there were berries there because he and Charles Stannard had been there the Sunday before. He had sometimes gone from his house to the Stannards' through the woods by Big Rock. He might have testified at Madison that he frequently went that way. The day of the homicide was a hot one, and witness supposed it was shady in the woods.

"Then why," asked Mr. Jones, "did you walk around by the road when you might have gone by a shorter way through the woods?"

"Because I thought as there was no breeze stirring that it would be hotter in the woods than in the road."

"Didn't you testify in Madison that you saw no one on your way home that day except Edgar Stevens's children?"

"I think likely enough I did."

"How was it you didn't remember meeting Mrs. Wood?"

"I didn't think of it till after she testified."

"Did you not say to Frederick Dowd that they'd found a woman who would swear she saw you on the way home that afternoon, and you guessed, by ——, she'd swear, also, that she saw Hayden up by the spring?"

"No, Sir."

"Did you see Sherman Buell and Frederick Dowd during the Madison trial?"

"Yes, Sir."

"Did you tell them the route you took on your way home on the afternoon of the homicide?"

"No."

"Didn't you tell them you should tell a very different story when you testified again?"

"I don't think I did."

"Did you in any way intimate to Mr. Buell that you intended to falsify when you came on the stand?" asked Mr. Waller, resuming the direct examination of the witness.

"No, Sir."

"Have you ever had improper intercourse with ——?"

"I object," interrupted Mr. Watrous, and the question was withdrawn. The examination of the witness was concluded after a few further questions, and the sick man was carried out of the court-room.

Oscar Stevens was next called, and testified that he was a member of the Rockland Coroner's jury, and heard Mr. Hayden state that he left his house on the afternoon of the homicide about 1:30 o'clock. He further testified that on the morning after the homicide Mr. Hayden piloted him and a number of others to Big Rock.

Court at 6 o'clock, adjourned until Tuesday.

PEOPLE WHO DO NOT RECEIVE.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Born abroad, I have lived in New-York only three years, and have just had my first experience in New Year's calls. Many others have doubtless had the same, and I wonder whether any of them have felt my sensations.

For a new-comer, I have quite a circle of acquaintances. Many ladies whom I have met at the country houses of friends have kindly sent me invitations to receptions, and have cordially asked me to call upon them. With my Winter months fully occupied with pressing work, I have found it impossible to accept these invitations, and yet I disliked to show the apparent rudeness of neglect. Under these circumstances, I concluded to take my holiday on the 1st of January, and make some of the calls to which I had been so frequently invited. Taking a carriage, I set out about 11 o'clock, promising myself the renewal of many charming acquaintances.

Arriving at the first house upon my list, and ringing the bell, which was answered by an intelligent-looking servant, I inquired for Mrs. —— The answer was that she was not receiving. I thought that, perhaps, she was ill, but was told that she was neither ill nor had she had a death or birth in her family—that, in fact, she was at home, but did not care to see her friends on this one particular day. I turned away in surprise, but this was nothing to my astonishment at the next house. There I saw a little basket hanging on the bell-knob. I had seen crape and white ribbon in such places, and, of course, knew what they mean; but this basket puzzled me not a little. Just then a gentleman friend came up the steps and explained the mystery. He told me that the lady was not receiving, and that, not wishing to give her servants the annoyance of opening the door, had adopted this device for saving them the trouble. Not being fond of such customs I must confess that I felt a little indignant and, now decided to go home. However, resolved to try one more house, and there, finding the ladies in, was greeted so warmly that I continued my visits. At about half the houses on my list I saw the little basket on the door or was told that the ladies were not receiving. Now, I am perplexed to know whether this is regarded as the politeness here. Among those whom I found at home were ladies of the first position in society, so I concluded that fashion had not set its ban upon the day. Did the others close the door because they thought the rice element, or because they would not take the trouble to receive their friends? Should a gentleman, in either case, give himself the trouble to call twice?

THE PACIFIC COAST WAR

THE TERRIFIC BATTLE OF PISAGUA.

STORMING THE HEIGHTS—FIERCE VALOR OF THE CHILIANS — DISGRACEFUL ATTACK UPON WOMEN IN LIMA—SOME RESULTS OF THE WAR.

Correspondence of the San Francisco Chronicle.

CALLAO, Peru, Nov. 18.—Next to Iquique, Pisagua was the most important port Peru possessed for the export of nitrate and the different minerals which are found in abundance in the district of Tarapaca. With its loss the important revenues derived from these sources have ceased, leaving Peru to rely on guano sales and inland taxes for the money necessary to furnish supplies for the war. How long this source will remain open can only be conjectured, but judging by the late doings of the Chilians, and the tone of the press here, it is believed the guano shipments will be stopped, unless the foreign creditors of Peru cause their Governments to interfere. The people here are now taxed to their last farthing, and increased taxation would be almost certain to provoke a violent outbreak. Yet, notwithstanding the impecunious condition of Peru, she manages to raise the funds to purchase large quantities of munitions of war in Europe and elsewhere. Her Army only costs for the feeding of the men. On the morning of Nov. 2 the Chilian fleet, under the command of Capt. Latorre, appeared in front of the town of Pisagua, and, after sounding and dragging for torpedoes that the enemy might have planted in the harbor, ranged in line of battle at a distance of 800 yards from the shore. The fleet consisted of one ironclad and five corvettes, viz., the O'Higgins, Covadonga, Magallanes, Loa and Angamos. Besides these there were eight transports carrying the invading force, which were so distributed as to be covered by the guns of the Chilian men of war. To defend the place the Peruvians had 16 guns of heavy calibre and two batteries of light field-pieces. The heavy guns were mounted in three parapet batteries, en barbette. One battery of four guns was located on the south of the town, another of six guns in the centre, and another of six guns on the north. Triple lines of rifle-pits covered their front, while an inner covered the crests of the hills which surround Pisagua.

The allied force consisted of 1,000 Peruvians and about 1,200 Bolivians, all under the command of Lieut.-Col. Isaac Recabarren. The attacking force was under the command of Gen. Escala, and numbered 8,000 men. At 7 A. M. a shower of shells from the men-of-war announced to the Peruvians that the attack had commenced, the forts on shore replying in a spirited manner, but with little effect. During this artillery duel the troops on the transports were getting the surf-boats launched and manning them in them, each boat being crowded to the utmost capacity. The first party, on reaching the shore, were met with a galling fire from the infantry in the intrenchments. The fire of the Chilian fleet was accordingly concentrated on the intrenchments and caused the more advanced Bolivian troops to retire to the breastworks at the rear of the beach. As the town was now burning in several places, vast volumes of smoke enveloped the place and completely hid from view the combatants. Large quantities of saltpetre stored along the waterfront now took fire, and, covered by the smoke therefrom, the Chilians in another attempt succeeded in landing their forces. The Atacama and Zepadores were the first battalions to land. They numbered 2,000 men, 500 of whom were killed or wounded before reaching the shore. The fire from the Chilian ships was now directed along the whole of the enemy's front, under cover of which the Chilian troops formed in line of battle, preparatory to storming the heights, for as yet the work had only begun. Soon the order was passed to charge, which was nobly responded to with a hurra and viva Chile. Now commenced a most difficult assault. The heights on which the allies were posted consisted of a succession of sharp hills rising one above the other, the sides in many places being formed with a face nearly perpendicular. Deep gullies, alternating with rugged rocks, cactus, and loose sand, composed the ground over which the Chilians must fight before reaching the summit, about 2,000 feet above the level of the sea. In addition to these natural obstacles were the successive lines of rifle-pits. Notwithstanding all this, the Chilians were equal to the task, pushed forward with a will and enthusiasm which would have done credit to veteran soldiers. The perilous ascent was now made by the invaders under a withering fire, which, however, did not cause the assaulting column to falter. The skirmishers of the first line disappeared like snow under a tropical sun, but their places were quickly filled. The Chilians now reached the forts, and in the face of a terrific fire of grape and canister, mounted the parapets and swiftly drove the enemy from his guns. Onward and upward they pressed, and, notwithstanding the gallant resistance made by the Bolivians, the allies were driven from their stronghold, and they retired in great disorder by the railroad in the direction of Dolores. At 1:30 P. M. the Chilian colors waved over Pisagua, the fight having lasted from 7 A. M. The Chilians took but few prisoners, as it appeared from reliable sources that they neither asked nor accepted quarter. The losses in killed and wounded of the Chilians amounted to about 600, while that of the allies reached between 300 and 400.

At the time the above fight was going on the Chilians had landed 1,500 men at Junin, a small coast town 25 miles to the southward, and captured the Bolivians stationed there without loss. These latter retreated and effected a junction with the main Chilian column at a point about 15 miles to the south-east of Pisagua. At about 5 P. M. the united command halted there and went into bivouac for the night, to await the arrival of supplies from the coast. The result of the above engagement once more proves the fighting qualities of the Chilians to be of the highest order, for so far in the present war they have nobly kept to their work whenever engaged, and if they have not always been victorious, they have at least lost without dishonor. The same can also be said of the Peruvians in the above fight, for they were only driven by superior numbers. The same cannot be said of the lower order of Peruvians, however, for at the storming of Pisagua they at first precipitately fled, and it was with difficulty that they could be reformed on the crest of the Heights of Abraham, of Chapultepec, of Missionary Ridge, and of Lookout Mountain. It has caused a considerable feeling of gloom and despair at Lima, and Callao, principally on account of the disastrous pecuniary losses entailed. To a person who has observed the noble traits of character which the late Admiral Grau possessed, one would think that he stood out as a faithful prototype of the Peruvian people. Such is not the case, however, for, from late events which transpired in this city, your correspondent is forced to believe otherwise. Upon the receipt of the news announcing the loss of Pisagua, an unfounded rumor was circulated in Lima and Callao to the effect that the Chilian soldiery had treated Peruvian women with great brutality. This rumor spread like wildfire, and finally the streets were filled with abandoned Peruvian women, and with the lower classes of both sexes. A large number of native Chilian women reside here and in Lima, many of them being married to foreigners, while others belong to the abandoned class. A cry was raised of "Death to the Chilinos," and a rush was made for the quarter where the latter class of Chilian women live. Upward of 20 or 30 of them were ruthlessly seized by the infuriated mob of virago, clothing, dragged through the streets in the most cruel manner, and left until they were in a frightful condition of suffering. Two or three were jumped upon, kicked, cut, and otherwise mangled, and left lifeless in the street without any covering over their bodies. After turning over about 60 Chilian women to the Prevost guard, the mob made a rush for the Hotel de Iquique, where respectable Chilian women live. There the same scenes were enacted as before, if not worse, as by this time the viragos were inflamed by liquor and were encouraged by a large number of the National Guard, who were mingled among the crowd, and were also under the influence of intoxicants. What were the authorities doing while this hellish work was in progress, may be asked. Nothing. At last, when the Captain of the port considered that these riotous demonstrations were increasing in magnitude, and when he saw that the mob was commencing to plunder, he ordered a company of troops to clear the streets. This force, under the Sub-Prefect, made a charge with fixed bayonets on the mob, which was now congregated about the plaza on the Calle de Constitucion. This charge was effectual in scattering the mob of women who, as they fled, dropped their prey, which consisted of a dozen terror-stricken Chilian women completely denuded. These were taken by the authorities and placed in the Cuartel, with a strong guard over them to protect them from further violence. In all about 100 Chilian women were in the hands of the mob, and had it not been for the soldiery, even though they were tardy in rendering assistance, many would have met with a great and barbarous death. The male portion of the populace did not take any active part in the disorders, but they were abettors of the mob, passively looking on and not attempting to quell those acts. A number of the Chilian women took refuge on foreign shipping, while others fled to their husbands on the thresholds of their own doors, being the wives of foreigners and entitled to the same protection as their husbands from their respective Governments.

Very little has been said about this disgraceful affair by the Peruvian journals, and, when it has been noticed, it has been smoothed over as a peculiar warning to the authorities to remove the Chilians, on the ground of morality and public safety. It seems as if the Peruvians have yet to learn that a man's wife holds the same citizenship as he himself does, and, therefore, cannot be classed as citizens of a country with which Peru is at war. Lima and Callao are under martial law, and a strict censorship is exercised over the press by Gen. La Cotera, the Minister of War. Nothing is allowed to be published that will have a tendency to weaken the Government. The people are kept in ignorance of the late military movements, and will know nothing until the Government is prepared to put down any tumult or outbreak that may occur. The Peruvian Congress has passed a law which has been approved by the Executive, prohibiting all commercial intercourse with Chili. In future no Chilian produce or manufactured articles will be admitted into Peru, and any person or corporation violating the above law will be punished by fine, imprisonment, and confiscation of goods. This law will were disastrously to the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, the steamers of which ply between this place and Valparaiso, and have been carrying large quantities of Chilian fruit and vegetables to the ports of Peru. It will be remembered that early in the present war Chili passed a similar law, but when its Government saw how the sentiment was evoked by it, it hastened to rescind it, and shipped daily their produce to Guayaquil, a port in a neutral country, and then obtained bona fide clearances from the Custom-House of this place for Callao, the law was repealed, and the Treasury of Chili thereby enriched by the heavy export duties imposed. Peru will likewise learn that it is to her interest to purchase breadstuffs in the cheapest market, even if it is controlled by an enemy. If Chili is successful in the present war she will have a settlement to make with the United States of Colombia. It is notorious that that country no more respects the obligations of neutrals than the parchment on which her treaties are written. Ever since Chili declared war against Peru, Colombia has allowed the shipment of arms at Panama on board of Peruvian transports, notwithstanding the protests made by the Chilian Consul at that place. Besides rifles and cartridges, the Colombian authorities have allowed the departure of three steel torpedo boats for Callao, where they in safety arrived, and they are now in condition to operate against the Chilian fleet should it make its appearance in these waters. These boats are constructed of steel, one-quarter of an inch thick below the waterline, and above that line of bulletproof seven-eighths of an inch thick. They are about 60 feet in length, 9 feet beam, and draw 3 feet of water. The propelling power is by twin screws. In shape and above the water-line they somewhat resemble the Winans cigar-steamer, once constructed at Baltimore. They are armed with two bronze guns, one on the bow and one on the stern, at the ends of which the torpedoes are attached, and are fired by an electric current, generated by a powerful battery, which is under cover. In navigating these boats no person is exposed, and, while the armor is not designed to resist shot from cannon, it is nevertheless sufficient to protect the crew from balls discharged from rifles or Gatling guns. At present writing the Peruvian war corvettes Union and Pilcomayo are in Arica, and it is thought that the Chilians will establish a blockade of that port.

ALDERMAN GEORGE HALL'S SALARY.

THE MAYOR WRITES ANOTHER LETTER TO THE CONTROLLER.

Mayor Cooper yesterday sent another communication to Controller Kelly in relation to the non-payment of the salaries of the Aldermen for November and December. The Mayor says: "On Dec. 2 I requested that the salary of Mr. George Hall be deducted from the roll and a new warrant drawn for the reduced amount. On Dec. 6, after you had declined to comply with that request, I asked that a separate warrant be drawn for the salary of each Alderman. By either method the Aldermen, other than Mr. Hall, would be paid independently of any question as to the right of the latter to payment. The Counsel to the Corporation has advised me, in the opinion of which I send you a copy, that upon the state of facts which I am informed exists Mr. Hall should not be paid. In your letter you discuss at length the right of Mr. Hall to payment, but give no reason for not complying with my request to draw a separate warrant for each Alderman, except the statement that you prepared a warrant for the payment of the salaries of the Aldermen for the month of November in accordance with the payment of those salaries for preceding months had been prepared in accordance with the system you had established for the administration of the Finance Department, and in conformity with which the books of the department are kept. It is true that the salaries of the Aldermen for preceding months have been paid by one warrant, but there was then no question raised as to the right of any Alderman to payment. The conviction of two Inspectors of Election of felony in making a fraudulent return of the votes cast for Mr. Hall, which, I am informed, altered the result of the election, had not then occurred. It is not the fact, however, that you have established any general system in the Finance Department requiring the salaries on a pay-roll to be paid by one warrant. Among other instances, certain pay-rolls of the Park Department are habitually sent to me with separate warrants for the payment of individual salaries. Nor is it the fact that it is inconsistent with the system you have established for the administration of the Finance Department, and in conformity with which the books of the department are kept, to deduct the amount of items on a pay-roll in respect to which there is a question, and draw one warrant for the reduced amount, leaving the items deducted to be paid by a separate warrant, if subsequently allowed. Pay-rolls have come to me with such deductions and a warrant to correspond, and subsequently the reserved amounts have been allowed and paid. You have also done so in several instances at my request. Any system by which a question as to the propriety of paying one or more persons on a pay-roll would defeat or delay for any considerable period the payment of other persons on the same pay-roll, in respect to whom there was no question, would be indefensible. The system, as adopted by your predecessor, that all payments, salaries included, should be made by separate warrant to the order of the person entitled to payment, except only in the case of wages, was, I think, the proper one, but I cannot think upon its adoption, as the law prescribes that payments for wages and salaries may be made upon pay-rolls, and the aggregate amount may be made payable to the Superintendent, Principal, teacher, foreman, or other officer designated for the purpose. This provision is permissive only, and yet mandatory enough to shall prevent your agreement as to the claim of Mr. George Hall to the Counsel to the Corporation in order that he may consider it and give me such further advice in regard to it as he may deem proper. I send herewith the Aldermanic pay-roll for November and also that for December, which I have signed, with the request that you forward requests that arrangements be made for the payment of members of the Board of Aldermen other than Mr. George Hall. If you see proper to do so, you can sign and send to me a warrant for Mr. George Hall also, and if I do not countersign it, the responsibility will be wholly on me.

THE SPURIOUS EDITION OF IRVING.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

We were not a little surprised to read in your paper of Dec. 24 the notice of the so-called "Kastenhill Edition of Irving's Works." Your notice states that this volume presents a "complete and unabridged edition of the life and works of Washington Irving," "includes the entire range of Irving's works," and "puts the whole of Irving within the reach of people of narrow means." These statements in no way describe this volume, and they are calculated to aid in the deception attempted upon the public and to cause injury to the nieces of Washington Irving, who are the owners of the copyrights of his works, as well as to ourselves, their publishers, who alone are able to supply Irving's works to the public.

The following are the facts in regard to this so-called "Kastenhill" edition:

First—It is entirely unauthorized by the representatives of the Irving copyrights.

Second—It is an injury to the reputation of the author, whose literary rights are infringed, and to the owners of the copyrights, whose property it is attempted to appropriate, and an imposition upon the public, from whom it is proposed to delude into buying as "complete works" what is merely a collection of unrevised fragments.

Third—The volume, notwithstanding its misleading title of "Irving's Works," presents to give material, but only 1,000 pages of Irving's 2,500 pages. Of Irving's writings the "Life of Washington," and others of the most important. Of "Columbus" but one-third is given, of "Wolfert's Roost" but one-quarter, of "Spanish Papers," less than half, and of "Miscellanies," but one-seventh, while the titles of all of the other works of Irving are in the volume in question as if the works were included entire.

All of Irving's works were carefully revised, and in many cases material additions were made by the fastidious author before he was ready to give his sanction to their being offered to the public in permanent book form, and this volume is in no way "Irving's Works" as prepared by Irving. The sketch by Mr. Stoddard, called on the title page the "Life of Irving," and which is made to take the place of Pierre Irving's three-volume biography, is very fragmentary and inaccurate.

FOREIGN BUSINESS INTERESTS.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—Mr. Samuel Plimsoll, member of Parliament for Derby, and author of the Merchants' Shipping act, has declared his intention to make an earnest effort at the coming session of Parliament to secure legislation prohibiting the loading of grain in bulk.

LIVERPOOL, Jan. 2.—A leading grain circular says: "The grain trade since Tuesday has been quiet, but prices have been firm, in the face of rather lower quotations from New-York. Price there must yet fall considerably to reach the level of those of Great Britain. Some of the provincial markets were even dearer than last week for foreign wheat. Native wheat is still in disfavor with millers. The imports into the United Kingdom last week were much below the average, and consequently at the Liverpool mart there was a quiet trade in wheat, the turn of prices favoring buyers where any business was done, but the majority of holders were not disposed to accept a decline. There was hardly any inquiry for corn, which was offered at 1d. per cental reduction. Flour and other articles were nominally unchanged, the transactions being quite of a retail character."

A SALESMAN'S DANGER.

SARATOGA, N. Y., Jan. 2.—Among the guests at the Western Hotel in Church-street, on Thursday, were W. N. Perry, agent for a firm of button manufacturers in Gloversville, and Herman S. Allen and his wife, Jennie Allen. Mrs. Allen told Perry that she wanted to purchase some buttons, and asked him to see the saleshop. Upon reaching her room, Perry claims, Mrs. Allen acted in a strange manner, and he had been there only a few moments when her husband burst into the room and accused Perry of attempting to maltreat his wife. Perry denied the allegation, and, on preparing to leave the room, was stopped by Allen, who assumed the air of an injured husband, and threatened all sorts of punishment. Perry took matters very coolly, however, forced his way out of the room, and caused the arrest of Allen and his wife on a charge of assault and battery. The prisoners were taken before Justice Cheney, and, not wishing to give bail to await the action of the Grand Jury.

MR. BRIGHT ON AMERICA

HIS ADMIRATION OF THE GREAT REPUBLIC.

SPEECH AT THE RECEPTION OF MR. POTTER AT ROCHDALE—LIBERAL ENCOMIUMS OF THE UNITED STATES AND THEIR INSTITUTIONS.

All the London papers of Dec. 19 contain elaborate discussions on Mr. Bright's speech at the reception of Mr. Potter at Rochdale, on the previous evening, and the partiality which he showed for the American Republic. The following are extracts from the speech:

"I have had hundreds, I think, of invitations to visit the United States. A regret very much that in past years opportunity was not afforded me so that I could have gratified that wish. Only within the last three or four months—I think it was toward the end of the month of July—I received a most courteous and kind letter from the President of the United States. [Cheers.] Having heard some rumor that I was about to visit the country over which he presides as chief magistrate, he did me the honor to ask me, if I came to the States, to take up my residence at his house—at the White House in Washington—and to consider myself his guest there as long as I should be able to remain in that city. [Cheers.] I was obliged to write him a letter which gave no distress to me, but which was a decline of invitation, as kind in him and as honorable to me from circumstances which I need not here detail. But one thing I may say and admit, that whatever was the—I will say almost insatiable—appetite that I had for traveling 40 years ago, now, when so many years have passed over, I feel as if I had not the spirit and the enterprise to make a long sea voyage, and to meet the excitement, for it would be a great excitement, and the welcome which I am assured I should meet with on the other side of the Atlantic. [Cheers.] However, you will believe, and I hope friends of mine in the United States will believe, that I am sensible of their kindness, that I appreciate it fully, and I regret that at present, at any rate, and I fear for the future, there is little chance of my being able to accept the generous invitation which they have forwarded to me. But now there is another feeling perhaps prevalent among us—I confess that I do share in it—and that is, a feeling of envy that our respected representative and friend has enjoyed this grand excursion, and has seen what he has seen, and that for himself probably, and for most of you, we shall never are not likely ever to partake of the same advantage. We hear a great deal about the great country that he has been passing some three months in, but after all that we have heard, I believe, if the truth were known it would be found that we know very little about it."

After speaking of prophetic references to the New World, and dwelling on the vastness of its extent and resources, he said, "But there is no doubt there is a great difference between the United States and these countries in Europe with the exception of one country, that is France. [Cheers.] They differ in being a Republic. It is quite true, I believe, what he says, that he only saw four drunken people in America. Well, but he did not see one Emperor. [Laughter.] He did not see an Emperor or an Empress—[laughter and cheers]—or Kings or Queens, or Princes of the Royal Family, or Princes, or those high dignitaries to whom we pay no great and often so deserved respect—[hear, hear,]—are not to be found in that country, and I have no doubt where men are intelligent enough and moral enough to sustain a Government like that they have the United States, though there may be in some particulars some perils, yet on the whole, the Government they possess is one which is entitled to their entire confidence. [Hear, hear.] I think that Mr. Shawcross or Mr. Potter—I forget which, perhaps both—said they have no great army. There are some regiments in this country, but in Germany and France and Russia, and are surprised, and perhaps delighted, to find how few soldiers are to be seen in England compared with some of the European nations, but in America they disbanded their great army of a million of men. They have now a force of perhaps 25,000 men, I think, but that is for the purpose of war abroad. [hear, hear,] nor is it maintained for the purpose of suppressing liberty at home, [cheers,] and yet there is no country in the world which is more universally respected throughout the globe than the United States of America; and there is no country where, on the whole, the laws are better obeyed, and public order more constantly maintained. [Cheers.] Another thing is this in which they differ from us, that they have, as I believe, almost no political treaties. [Laughter, and hear, hear.] Washington, their first great President, advised them to have no political treaties—commercial treaties as they liked, and as much trade as they could have with all countries. They have not followed his advice in that so much as I should like, but with regard to political treaties, in the main they have followed his advice, and you I believe there is no country with whom all other countries are more friendly at this moment than the United States. [Hear, hear.] I think mention has been made of the fact that there were no Bishops in their Senate. [Hear, hear.] Well, I have no doubt there are people in England who would nominate their condition in regard to that, I don't. [Loud cheers.] They have not constructed a machine mostly political and partly religious, in which the State bolsters up the religions on the condition that the religious bolster up the State. [Loud cheers.] They have not got any favored creed in their organization—[hear, hear]—which leads to the crimes of monarchs and of statesmen the sanction of the simulated voice of God, by which Christianity is demoralized and degraded. [Loud and continued cheers.] I said also—and it is this last point I on which I will refer to any difference between the two countries—that there is no land monopoly, no system of law which is intended to maintain great families in possession of vast estates, that they may confer on those families great political power which may be used, and has been almost always used, to opposition to the true rights and liberties and freedom of the people. [Cheers.] They have not preferred, as we have preferred in this country, to maintain a thousand great houses and great proprietors, when we might have had hundreds of thousands of comfortable and happy homesteads. [Cheers.] I spoke of Europe as a republic of the United States as a Republic. If you have read history, and considered it, you will find that the wars and the extravagance of Louis XIV. of France, the profligacy of his successor and his nobles, laid the foundation of the French Republic; [hear,] if you will read the story of the folly and the tyranny of George III. and his Ministers, and the perverse obstinacy of their majority in Parliament, laid the foundation of the North American Republic. [Cheers.] I wonder whether it ever occurs to the crowned heads of Europe what will come of the military system of Europe. [Hear, hear.] Everywhere great armies waiting up the comforts of the people—[hear]—everywhere military exaction becoming more and more unendurable—[hear]—everywhere menaces and acts of war—everywhere extravagance and growing debt. [Hear and cheers.] These things create discontent, invite disorder, make insurrection almost certain. If it be not absolutely necessary, and lay the foundation of fundamental changes in States such as we have witnessed in France and in America. [Cheers.] Now, there is one other question on which I must say something, because it is one in which I have long been interested, as have most of you, and in which Mr. Potter has taken very deep interest during the time he has said in America. I find, when we look at the American tariff, we shall have to do them justice. I find, when I speak of "Free Trade" I mean abroad, it because after this country had gone through a great war, and during the progress of that war in the time of Mr. Pitt, it was necessary to raise every farthing that could be screwed out of the people, and especially—not out of the people—[hear, hear]—but out of the wealth, great bulk of the nation, and Customs duties were put on almost everything that could be imagined, and upon some things that nobody in ordinary life ever heard of. [A laugh.] Well, the Americans, with their great war and with their great expenditure, did the same thing, for during a great war men are not in the state of mind to discuss these questions calmly, and to determine scientifically what is the best mode of taxation. Therefore they put a load upon everybody's back that happened come near them. After our war was over there was no great alteration in the whole of our tariff, and the tariff remained barbarous to the last degree almost until 1842, when, under Sir Robert Peel, and by the pressure of the free trade agitation, a reform was effected.

After a further discussion of the tariff, he continued: "I have a belief that the Americans, with all their schools, and all their newspapers, and all their free discussion, and with all their elections—for elections are wonderful opportunities of teaching—with all these, I believe the Americans are a people of great common sense, and before long the farmers throughout the Union will find that the protection under which they sell everything at the cheapest and buy everything at the dearest, and which makes them pay two freights for carrying their produce to Europe, is a system which they will no longer support. I don't hope much from the convinement of the Protectionists themselves. They are, I am sorry to say, afraid of the change, and I am not sure that I do them any injustice when I say that they have become what I would call greedy of gain. That I attribute to the great heart and great mind of the American nation. Their debt is continually lessening, their taxes will continually lessen, and the great public interest by and by will overweigh the clamor of private interests. What a grand thing it would be if England and all her colonies, including the colonies of the United States—for though a separate nation, they are still historically colonies of England—if England and her colonies including the United States, Colony of Canada, the Colonies of Australia and New-Zealand, the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope and the whole of the Indian Empire—altogether now reading, and which will soon attain to a population of nearly 400,000,000—probably nearly one-third of the whole population of the world—what a magnificent thing it would be if these nations alone adopted the principles of free trade, and set that great example to the World which the world must before long inevitably follow. Not only would the influence on the world be enormous with regard to the creation and the distribution of wealth, but with regard to another question of overpowering interest—the question of peace. [Loud cheers.] With the fall of tariffs by the union of peoples through free trade between nations, we shall find also that there will be a fall of that military system which now oppresses all the nations of the earth, and which, even in this country, in my opinion, dishonors and rejects the Christianity which we profess. [Loud and prolonged cheering.]

Parnell, as likely to accomplish a beneficial result. A collection was taken up for the Irish Land League. Letters were read from Gov. Cullom, Senators Davis and Logan, Congressmen Springer and Singleton, and others.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

A fire at Menomonee, Wis., Thursday destroyed an entire block of buildings, among them the Post Office, Mr. Prahler's store, Kiernan's restaurant, two buildings owned by A. O. Bailey, Johnson's drug store, Bryan's harness shop, Taft's jewelry store, and several law offices. The loss is estimated at $20,000. At Open Hall, Newfoundland, the Bona Vista dwelling-house has been destroyed by fire, and two brothers, John Farrell, 43 years of age, and Joshua Warren, 23 years old, perished in the flames. Two young girls barely escaped with their lives.

A fire Thursday afternoon in the dry goods house of M. Ruff & Co., Quincy, Ill., damaged the stock from $10,000 to $15,000, and the building to the extent of $12,000. The firm carries over $35,000 insur

THE CONSULATES IN CHINA

MR. MOSBY'S CHARGES AGAINST MR. BAILEY.

CONSULAR OFFICERS ACCUSED OF MAKING FALSE QUARTERLY RETURNS TO THE STATE DEPARTMENT AT WASHINGTON—MOSBY'S SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT IN FULL.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—It may be remembered that at the last session of Congress an investigation was made of the administration of affairs at the Hong Kong and Shanghai Consulates, resulting in an effort being made to impeach George S. Seward, now Minister at Pekin, China, and David H. Bailey, now Consul-General at Shanghai. When the alleged irregularities occurred Mr. Seward was Consul-General at Shanghai, and Mr. Bailey was Consul at Hong Kong. Upon the promotion of Mr. Bailey from Hong Kong to Shanghai, Col. John S. Mosby, of Virginia, was appointed to succeed Bailey, and this gentleman has been in charge at Hong Kong for about one year. The attempt to impeach Seward and Bailey failed mainly by reason of the expiration of the Forty-fifth Congress, but the evidence was so damaging against these officers that great surprise was expressed at the State Department permitting them to continue in office. Before the adjournment for the Christmas holidays, Mr. Hunton, of Virginia, introduced a resolution in the House, which was passed, calling upon the State Department for copies of all correspondence between that department and Consul Mosby in reference to the official conduct of the Hong Kong Consulate under Mosby's immediate predecessors in office. This correspondence is now being copied, and will be ready for presentation to the House soon after the reassembling of Congress. One of Mr. Mosby's letters contains charges so damaging to Bailey and so scandalous to the consular service that Secretary Evarts considers that it would be "incompatible with the public interests" to make it public, and he has, therefore, decided to withhold it. THE TIMES's correspondent, however, has been permitted to make a copy of the letter in question, the full text of which will be found below:

UNITED STATES CONSULATE,
HONG KONG, Dec. 31, 1879.

Hon. E. W. Stoughton, Assistant Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In my No. 29, dated Sept. 22, 1879, I stated that I would submit to the department a supplementary report on the frauds and abuses formerly practiced here in shipping and discharging seamen, the collection of extra wages, and granting relief to destitute seamen. This I now proceed to do. In the first place, I will say that while it was notorious here that these frauds existed, yet I had not deemed the proof accessible, (as almost all the ships that paid extra wages during Mr. Bailey's term here had left this port,) until the spring of the present year, on investigating the emigration business with Gen. Stahel, my attention was attracted by the internal evidence of fraud furnished by the quarterly returns of Mr. Bailey. After Gen. Stahel left I made a search for duplicates of these returns, and a comparison of Mr. Bailey's and Mr. Loring's and my own. The result is a most cogent demonstration of their fictitious character.

I invite attention to the consolidated statement of all the quarterly statements, returns of extra wages, and report of seamen shipped and discharged, from 1871, to Sept. 30, 1879, prepared by my Vice-Consul, Mr. Brooks. The most striking feature of this statement is the small number of discharges reported by Mr. Bailey as compared with the number of vessels that he cleared, and also the great disparity between the number shipped and discharged. When a vessel enters it generally discharges a portion of its crew; when it clears it ships a number of seamen to fill up vacancies caused by discharges and by desertions. At the port of Hong Kong, where desertion is very difficult, the number shipped should be greater than to exceed the number discharged. The Government only loses $1 the shipping fee, for a failure to report a seaman shipped, but as under Mr. Bailey, nearly all discharges were accompanied with the payment of extra wages, the Government would lose both the fee and extra wages when a discharge was not reported. Mr. Bailey cleared 652 vessels while he was here. From there he reported only 460 discharges in all, 290 of these being with extra wages, and 203 seamen shipped. During the six years preceding 1879, his predecessor, Mr. Loring, had 192 in all discharged. In other words, more men were discharged during the first year, 1871, than during his subsequent six.

Again, according to his report, nearly five times as many were shipped as were discharged. From the tabulated statement it will be seen that the proportion of my shipments to discharges has been less than two to one, and Loring's a little over two to one. Bailey cleared on an average 95 vessels a year, Loring averaged 77, and I, in the 18 months he was in charge, cleared 135. My average is 4 discharges for each ship cleared; Loring's over 3, while Bailey's average for his whole term is less than 1 for each clearance, (652 vessels cleared, with 460 discharges,) and for the six years succeeding 1871, by his reports, only 192 discharges for 1,095 vessels cleared. The number of clearances and discharges under Bailey, Loring and myself have been as follows:

	Cleared.	Discharged.
Bailey	652	460
Loring	187	318
Mosby	85	344

This statement, at least, creates a very strong presumption of fraudulent concealment of the seamen discharged. But Bailey's proportion of discharges would have been much greater than mine, as he made many compulsory discharges, sometimes of whole crews, with three months extra wages, while all of mine have been by mutual consent.

EXTRA WAGES.

The collection of extra wages at this consulate has, for many years, been a subject of remonstrance by the masters of British merchant and ship-masters. There were over 20 American vessels in port when I came here, and nearly all of the masters called on me to ascertain if I would follow the rule of my predecessor. The question was new to me, and I could not answer immediately. It was a subject of frequent conversation, at least of complaint, between Mr. Loring and myself during the few weeks that he remained after my arrival. When I came to a decision I announced it to the masters, and all expressed themselves as perfectly satisfied with it. But as I had taken a new departure, and reversed a rule that had prevailed here for a great many years, I deemed it only common justice to my Government to refer the matter, and ask for instructions to guide me. This I accordingly did in my No. 5, dated Feb. 17, 1879. In that dispatch, written in the house then occupied by Mr. Loring and read to him, I said: "I have been thus full in presenting my views on this subject, as I have covered the ruled that has prevailed in this consulate, and discussed it in this port by my predecessor in office. A large number of American vessels arrive here with crews composed wholly of foreigners shipped in the ports of Japan, China and Australia, and stipulating in their articles to be discharged here. Heretofore it has been the rule at this port, in all such cases, to exact the extra wages. I do not exact them in such cases, for, if I did, I would thereby acknowledge the corresponding right of these seamen to claim my case and protection after the discharge. The records of the consulate show great numbers have failed to collect, in violation of the law of extra wages to discharges in such cases. In my judgment these complaints are well founded."

I remember very well what Mr. Loring's criticism on this dispatch was. He said, "You will find that the department will sustain the old rule, and you will be held responsible for all the extra wages you have failed to collect." Loring had acted as Vice-Consul under Bailey several years, and simply carried out this rule. The announcement of my rule was hailed as a great deliverance by the ship-masters, but strange to say, one looking over the "return of extra wages" economic would infer that the hardship was in the new rule and not in the old one, for there was brought in a great deal more money into the treasury than the old rule under Mr. Bailey. Bailey's annual average was about $700; in less than eight months my returns show $1,116 collected and paid into the Treasury. It must also be borne in mind that of the 65 vessels I have cleared since my predecessor sailed, I arrived here and had already discharged their crews, and paid their extra wages to Loring, so that very little was left for me to do for them except to ship their crews. My dispatch No. 5 of Feb. 17, 1879, and No. 16, of June 18, 1879, show that I have taken exactly an opposite view of the law of extra wages from my predecessor, and have adopted the most liberal construction of its favor of the ship, and have exerted myself to reduce them to a minimum, for I do not approve of the policy of the law. I believe it is generally used as a corruption fund, and divided between the Consul and keepers of sailors' boarding-houses. Loring assumed charge of the consulate at the close of the third quarter, 1877. Bailey reports $1,687 as the amount for the quarter, and in

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, author of "That Lass o' Lowrie's," "Haworth's," &c., will contribute an original story entitled "The Colonel's Daughter," and devoted to certain remarkable phases of Southern life and politics, to The Times of to-morrow.

The Signal Service Bureau report indicates for to-day, in this region, north-east to north-west winds, rising barometer, slightly cooler, partly cloudy weather.

The Treasury statement just issued presents some remarkable figures. The amount of debt reduction for December has been, in round numbers, four millions and a quarter, showing, for the first six months of the financial year, a total decrease of about fifteen millions and a half. There has been during the month a falling off to the amount of fifteen millions of the gold coin and bullion on hand, while the stock of silver dollars has been increased $300,000. The available balance, in the shape of United States and national bank notes, against which no liabilities are outstanding, decreased from $14,950,995 on Dec. 1 to $7,455,630 on Jan. 1. The Customs receipts for December were over $4,000,000, or 50 per cent, greater than during the corresponding month of 1878, and the internal revenue receipts show an increase of over $1,800,000, or 16 per cent., as compared with December of the preceding year.

The only candidates for the Speakership who appear to have any chance of success are Mr. Husted and Gen. Sharpe. Were a thorough familiarity with parliamentary methods, long experience in the work of a presiding officer, and consummate skill and adroitness in discharging it the only essential requirements of the position, there could be no dispute about the superior fitness of Mr. Husted. But it happens that one of the most important duties of the Speaker is the appointment of committees, and that on the way in which this duty is discharged depends, in great measure, the manner in which the business of the session is conducted. In various other familiar ways the Speaker can affect the whole tone and character of legislation, and he thus becomes, in a very emphatic sense, the exponent of the character and purposes of the party which he represents. For such a rôle, Mr. Husted is entirely inadmissible. It is not a question of the ideal fitness of Gen. Sharpe for this and other responsibilities of the Speakership. The choice ought to be determined by the practical consideration that the present interests and future prospects of the party would be far safer in his hands than in those of his chief opponent. Blunders of impulse or inexperience he might easily commit, but of a deliberate betrayal of principle we believe him to be absolutely incapable. As between Mr. Husted and Gen. Sharpe, there should, on any ground of enlightened partisanship or of public necessity, be no hesitation in preferring the latter.

It is said that the Tammany members of the new Board of Aldermen are to be magnanimous enough to cast their votes in favor of the election of a Republican President of the board. The Republican majority of New-York tax-payers will thus have a representative of their party on the Board of Apportionment, but whether he will be a credit to the party and of service to the tax-payers is a question which it would be rash to attempt to answer. It may safely be assumed that Mr. Kelly will expect the Republican member of the Board of Apportionment to act as his ally in the same subservient manner as Mr. Wheeler, and it is not improbable that Tammany expects some consideration from a Republican Legislature in return for its magnanimity in the organization of the Board of Aldermen. In the interests of the party and the public, it is to be hoped that both expectations will be disappointed.

Gen. John S. Mosby, United States Consul at Hong Kong, has sent to the State Department a very long communication, in which he virtually charges his predecessor in office, Mr. Bailey, with a variety of dishonest practices. The letter, printed in The Times to-day, is somewhat diffuse in its details; but, as Mr. Bailey is now Consul-General at Shanghai, his [Mosby's] allegations demand attention. The conduct of the United States Consulates in China has been made the subject of much dispute and of some official inquiry. In this case Gen. Mosby deduces from the records of his office a series of inferences, which amount to charges that Col. Bailey defrauded the Government, oppressed American commerce, and made "artificial returns" to cover up his illegitimate transactions. The letter presents a formidable array of facts and figures, which certainly require explanation.

Controller Kelly is, doubtless, a very able person, but he decidedly transcends his powers when he insists on setting his opinion on a question of law above that of the Corporation Counsel, who is the official exponent of the law affecting the conduct of public business. The whole tedious controversy over the payment of the salary of Alderman Hall simply turns upon the point as to whether Mr. Kelly shall be permitted to compel the Mayor to perform an act which the Mayor believes to be illegal, and which the Corporation Counsel advises him would be so. There is nothing whatever to prevent the Controller from making out a separate warrant for the pay of each Alderman, leaving with the Mayor the responsibility of refusing to countersign any one which he conceives to have been improperly issued. Such was the uniform practice of Mr. Kelly's predecessor, and such has been his own practice in regard to other departments when he deemed it necessary. His pay-roll system is slovenly in its method, and has a dangerous tendency to break down the safeguards which ought to surround the disbursement of public money. The pig-headed obstinacy with which he adheres to it for the purpose of serving a political favorite who was not legally elected, is as contumacious as it is arrogant. It is time that Mr. Kelly was convinced that he is merely a public servant, not a Municipal autocrat.

PARTISANS RESTRAINED BY THE PEOPLE.

Even the Maine conspiracy has served one useful purpose. It has directed the attention of thoughtful men to the latent dangers of the partisanship which deems justifiable any means which secure the attainment of designated ends. It has demonstrated the utter contempt of the leaders and managers of the Democratic Party in Maine for the known opinions of the people; and it has established the readiness of a certain section of the Republican Party to make a flagrant outrage upon the declared electoral will the pretext for an equally flagrant attack upon established authority. One crime has been adduced as a reason for the perpetration of another. The sole redeeming fact is that the Democratic authors of the official outrage at the last moment quail before the storm their proceedings have raised; and that the Republican fomenters of lawless mischief have been overborne by the conservative instincts of the community.

No subject has recently arisen better calculated to test the moral strength of parties or to expose the vices inherent in their present management. The Northern people, irrespective of party, have watched the progress of events in a New-England State with incredulous wonder and dismay. They had difficulty in believing that the Executive of a Commonwealth in which respect for liberty and law has been conspicuous, was busied with an attempt to reverse the acknowledged results of an election. They were equally at a loss to understand how the local opponents of the Governor and his plans could be induced by demagogues, reverend and otherwise, to entertain projects that would have entailed upon the State bloody strife and lawlessness. Outside of the State, the double wrong of the situation was too palpable to be misunderstood. Decent Democrats of other Northern States saw plainly that Garcelon and his fellow-conspirators were engaged in a work that would consign their party to infamy and defeat. They saw that a party responsible for the nullification, by technical trickery and daring usurpation, of the will of Maine, could not hold up its head in other parts of the North; and they denounced the proceedings roundly.

On the other hand, sensible Republicans recognized the folly of the tactics which their party in Maine was urged to adopt. To them it was evident that an occasion which called for the assertion of lawful right was in danger of being perverted into an excuse for violence; that at a critical moment their party was likely to be put on the defensive by the action of hot-headed members, with the certainty that such an occurrence would deprive the party in Maine of the most enduring advantages of its position. We must believe that these outside influences have not been entirely ineffectual. Gov. Garcelon has felt the sting of Democratic reproaches, and perhaps also the sagacity of Democratic warnings. And the Republican fanatics who would have brought about an insurrection have subsided before the indignant outburst which reached them from other States. The moral of the whole affair is, that Northern opinion generally is more entitled to confidence, and is a surer bulwark of popular liberty, than is the ordinary leadership of either party, when the maintenance of order and right is at stake amid the local excitement of a partisan contest.

The inference is still further strengthened by the fate that overtook the scheme started in this State with the view of utilizing the Maine outrage for purposes as base as those contemplated by Garcelon and his abettors. It was suggested that by availing themselves of their power, the Republican Legislative majorities in doubtful Northern States might determine the Presidential election in advance. They were reminded that they have only to take unto themselves the election of Presidential Electors to render practically impossible the defeat of the Republican candidate. The circumstances in which the suggestion appeared—its simultaneous presentation in all parts of this State, in the columns of journals known to be controlled by the machine politicians—left no room for doubt as to its origin. The pleas offered in its support were everywhere the same. Of course, the Maine outrage was the principal plea. "See," it was said, "what the Maine Democrats are doing; now let us show them what the Republicans of New-York, New-Jersey, Ohio, and Connecticut can do." In other words, Garcelon's usurpation of a power fatal to popular liberty was to be made the pretext for Republican usurpation in several States. The mere statement of the proposition was enough to prove that the class of partisan knaves, of whom Garcelon happens just now to be a notorious example, is not confined to one party. But the proposition soon received its quietus. Republican principle revolted against it, and its authors were constrained to drop it without more ado. For the second time, therefore, since the Garcelon plot began, the good sense of the Republican Party has suppressed mischief-making leaders and vindicated its title to more than partisan support.

THE INSURANCE DEPARTMENT.

An Albany rumor attributes to Gov. Cornell an intention to renominate Mr. John F. Smyth for the headship of the Insurance Department, under a belief that the appointment will not obtain the requisite confirmation. In this way, it is alleged, the Governor proposes to satisfy whatever personal or partisan obligations he is under to Mr. Smyth, and at the same time to avert the difficulties which the renewal of his incumbency would entail on all concerned.

If the Governor, in the selection of appointees, exacts in a moderate degree the qualifications required for the effective performance of the duties involved, it is certain that he will not only not reappoint Mr. Smyth, but that he will enforce a higher standard of fitness than has usually prevailed in this State, when the supervision of the wide field of insurance is to be cared for. The Insurance Department differs from nearly all others in the character of the interests intrusted to it, and the qualifications needed for the service to be performed. Neither party thinks of nominating for the office of State Engineer a man wholly destitute of engineering training and experience. Recent experience has shown that more than professional acquirements are looked for—that a candidate, to be successful, must command respect for his character, as well as confidence in the moderate degree of skill which is, by common consent, deemed essential. But the chief of a department which, theoretically at least, supervises the complicated business of life insurance has need, in a yet greater degree, of familiarity with the theory and practice of life insurance. He should be able to determine for himself the tests to be applied, to superintend their application, and generally to understand the condition of companies, the characteristics of their management, the peculiarities of treatment made necessary by varying results of experience. Besides being master of the subject in all its branches, his antecedents should supply guarantees against the abuse of opportunities which occur to such an officer with more or less frequency. He should inspire confidence in the rectitude of his purposes and the wisdom of his action, whether as regards the relations of companies to their policy-holders and the public, or the use of the discretionary authority intrusted to him by the law. Neither partisan energy nor personal influence is a recommendation which in this case should be considered. The duties to be performed are in no manner partisan; on the contrary, the partisan habit is incompatible with their effective performance. They are also far removed from mere business routine. The man who should be asked to undertake them is honest, has clean hands, and, in addition, has special capacity for solving the business problems which arise in the conduct of insurance. Gov. Cornell cannot better signalize his advent to power than by nominating for the Insurance Department a non-partisan, whose experience and character will command the respect of the companies and the confidence of the public.

Is the Governor prepared thus to begin a reform that would re-establish faith in the possible efficacy of State supervision, and purge the Insurance Department of the discredit that is now attached to it? If not, there are other considerations which even from the partisan point of view he cannot afford to overlook. He may think that we magnify the office to be filled; he cannot be unconscious of the exposures which have made that office a reproach, and have done much toward destroying all trust in the work devolving upon it. At any rate, it is meanwhile fair to assume that while clinging to partisan methods, he is not entirely indifferent to the lessons of a record which is scarcely less damaging to New-York Republicans than to the legitimate functions of the Insurance Department.

Objections to the reappointment of Mr. Smyth are not confined to his incapacity, estimated according to the standard we have described. His lack of qualifications was so well known at the time of his original appointment that though the bargain at the bottom of it was intelligible, the subserviency which confirmed it was too pitiful to be excused. Since then, Mr. Smyth has proved that professional incapacity is the least of the defects chargeable against him. Had his demerits been negative only, the department might have been managed, in a certain way, without him. He would then have been simply an ornamental Superintendent. But he was not satisfied with this position. While delegating to others the work of the department, he engrafted upon its administration the vices of the school in which he had been trained. The department became a common partisan reservoir, and its authority was perverted to corrupt partisan purposes. Examinations of life companies were made means of rewarding the unscrupulous clique he had gathered about him. Companies were plundered to enrich his allies. The sanctity of trust funds was violated in order that the machine he manipulated might be kept in profitable motion. The system of supervision degenerated into a system of black-mail. And while the screws of the department were turned to extort from solvent companies extravagant fees and expenditures as the price of favorable certificates, companies notoriously fraudulent and rotten were, by the connivance of the department, enabled to prolong their mischievous existence. Checks provided by law were impudently set aside, and Mr. Smyth set up himself above the law to give effect to these plans. We are but reciting facts that were brought to light when Mr. Smyth was on his trial before the Senate in the Spring of 1878. The impression they produced is not weakened by a remembrance of the infamous bargain whereby Tammany Senators saved the offender from the punishment he deserved.

Gov. Cornell cannot reappoint Mr. Smyth, in defiance of the outraged sense of public decency, without assuming responsibility for the immoral compact which retained Mr. Smyth in the department he had disgraced. Nor is there anything in its subsequent action, or in the course pursued by Mr. Smyth, which should mitigate the harsh judgment pronounced out of doors against all connected with the transaction. Gov. Robinson's petty attempt to renew proceedings last March failed of its purpose, but the failure in no manner helps Mr. Smyth. The record against him remains, and his renomination in spite of it would be an unpardonable wrong.

THE MYSTERY OF TILDEN.

If the Democrats expect to have any share in the history of the political campaign of 1876, as it will be read by the school-children of 1980, they should agree upon the story that they are to tell. The best Democratic authorities disagree in the most distracting manner. It was not long ago that Mr. Abram S. Hewitt complained that Mr. Tilden "allowed" Mr. Henry Watterson to go around the country "lying about" him, [Hewitt.] Then the Kentucky journalist retorted with a series of epithets which were simply blood-curdling, and which, we are compelled to admit, so effectually shut up Mr. Hewitt that he has not been heard from since. Gen. James B. Steedman, of the Toledo Democrat, has been the innocent cause of setting an old dispute once more wide open and reviving the animosities which Democratic party leaders cherish toward each other. He has reopened the old discussion: Did Tilden run away from the Presidency, or was he cheated out of it?

It will be remembered that Mr. Hewitt has always claimed that Mr. Tilden not only knew all about the scheme of the Electoral Commission while that project was yet inchoate, but that he highly approved of it. If the Electoral Commission had resulted in putting Mr. Tilden into the White House, we should never have heard any discussion as to its merits or demerits; certainly not from the Tilden party. But as Tilden lost his last chance through the Electoral Commission, it is natural that he should regard that novel expedient as an invention of the enemy. He has blamed Mr. Hewitt and others of his party friends for their support of the bill creating the Electoral Commission. On the other hand, many Democrats think that Mr. Tilden showed a lamentable lack of courage when he allowed that tribunal to settle the case. They argue that the mere forms of law observed by the Electoral Commission should not have restrained Tilden from taking his alleged rights. And because he did not mount a fiery charger, put himself at the head of the New-York State National Guard, and go to Washington as President de facto and de jure, he proved himself to be destitute of back-bone. One eminent Democratic statesman has referred to the Sage of Gramercy Park as "a jelly-fish," and another has contumeliously described him as "a dam clam." Gen. James B. Steedman, having had a personal interview with Mr. Tilden, thinks that he has been foully abused and misrepresented. In his journal, Gen. Steedman, using the editorial pronoun in the first person and plural number, describes his visit to the Sage, who is referred to by an unfriendly commentator as "the old spider of Gramercy Park."

With delicious realism, Gen. Steedman begins his tale with this thrilling remark: "We rang his bell, were promptly admitted and shown into the parlor, and we sent our name to Mr. Tilden." The Sage, otherwise called "the old spider," appeared and almost instantly informed Gen. James B. Steedman that he [Tilden] was a much abused, calumniated, and misrepresented man. "I have been accused of cowardice, while my hands were tied by my friends," whimpered the Sage. "I was not consulted in regard to the Electoral bill, and knew nothing of its preparation until Mr. Hewitt called and informed me that the bill had been agreed upon." This is what Mr. Hewitt would call "a whopper," unless Mr. Hewitt is ready to take back all of his previous statements. Continued the Sage: "If the House of Representatives had elected me, I would have taken the oath and gone to Washington to take the office, believing that my friends would have put me into the White House." This has a certain correspondence with well-known facts. That veracious historian, John F. Mines, has already divulged how he was told by United States Attorney Woodford that it was arranged that Tilden should take the oath of office on the steps of the City Hall, and that there was a gun-boat lying ready, with steam up, not far off, into which the would-be President was to be flung and carried away to some distant part of the globe. And we also know that the editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal, then a Representative in Congress, had made a contract for 100,000 unarmed Kentuckians, deliverable in Washington, to do some doughty deed, of which no particulars were given. It is apparent, then, according to Tilden's statement to Steedman, that the Sage was to take the oath of office on the City Hall steps, at noon, March 4, 1877, and then go to Washington and be put into the White House by Mr. Watterson's unarmed Kentuckians. "But," complains Mr. Tilden, "my hands were tied." "How could I take the office while my own friends were arbitrating the question of my election?" Exactly so; how could he? But his own friends say that he knew all about the proposed arbitration, and that, if he was not in favor of it, he did not express any objection to it. This is the point on which there has been a frightful amount of lying somewhere. Did Mr. Tilden propose to disregard the technicalities of law, so dear to the heart of his friend, Gov. Garcelon, and prance on to Washington, ready to be pitchforked into the White House by Watterson's unarmed Kentuckians? Or did he sit down and indulge in futile dalliance until the Electoral Commission had given the Presidency to the other man? Until the Democrats settle these disputed points among themselves, they cannot ask that history shall "vindicate" a man about whose conduct so little is positively known.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL DRAMA.

The attempt to combine the Sunday-school and the theatre is always a doubtful experiment. The two ingredients can rarely be united so as to produce a satisfactory result. Either there is too much Sunday-school for the amount of theatre, in which case the entertainment is unspeakably dreary, or else there is too much theatre in proportion to Sunday-school, in which case the performance becomes objectionably worldly. Mr. George MacDonald's "Pilgrim's Progress" is almost the only instance of a successful Sunday-school drama, and even that really meritorious entertainment may be found fault with, on the ground that Faithful's habit of flirting with the pretty girls who keep tables at Vanity Fair is out of keeping with the character of that excellent person as conceived by Bunyan. Still, the belief that a Biblical play can be successfully acted by Sunday-school children can never be wholly eradicated from the enterprising Superintendent's mind, and hence the holiday season always witnesses repetitions of the familiar experiment.

Great things were anticipated, unreasonably of course, by the congregation of the Williston Congregational Church, in regard to the representation of the Scriptural play of "Elisha," last Monday night. The play was written by the Sunday-school Superintendent's wife, who was a clever woman of no little literary skill, and the Pastor and members of the Prudential Committee, who heard it read, were greatly impressed with its merits. Of the construction of the play, it is unfortunately impossible to speak, for reasons which will presently appear. There is no doubt, however, that it opened well, and we may concede its author's claim that it contained abundant incident, and was both thoroughly Scriptural in tone and sensational in its climaxes.

The lecture-room, with a temporary stage and a red drop-curtain, made a neat little theatre, which was crowded half an hour before the performance began. The curtain rose upon a scene representing a shady valley, with a high hill in the background, up which a practicable and very steep road ran. On each side of the stage was a dense forest of ten or twelve trees and a country tavern, with the sign "Railway Hotel," stood on the left side. In front of the tavern forty-two children—who constitute nearly the whole strength of the Sunday-school—were engaged in various games. Some of them were pitching quoits, others were pitching pennies, and others were playing marbles. All were quarreling fiercely, and from their appearance, were children of the very worst moral character and most curiously ragged clothes. To them presently entered from the right lower entrance the prophet Elisha, carrying his hat in his hand, in order to display his total lack of hair. He was a large prophet, with a long, white beard and a walking-stick of great size; but there is no doubt that he would have looked better had he been provided with a little hair. As he passed the Railway Hotel he stopped to ask the way to the nearest Post Office, but it is painful to relate that the boys refused to give him a civil answer. In fact, they chaffed the prophet and made allusions to his lack of hair, which were both personal and rude. The good man betrayed no anger, but he told them that they disgraced their parents by their conduct, to which they with one accord triumphantly answered that they "hadn't got none," and that they were "orphants." Greatly disgusted by this repartee, the prophet shook his stick sadly but kindly at them, and proceeded on his way. The wicked children continued to yell after him, advising him to buy a wig, or to try somebody's hair restorer, and in other ways expressing their wicked want of respect. Endurance having ceased to be a virtue, Elisha paused and whistled loudly. Whereupon two frightful bears issued from the forest, and, falling upon the children, began to tear them in pieces.

All would perhaps have gone well, had not one of the wicked boys refused to be torn. The others had promptly fallen flat on the ground the moment the bears arrived, instead of climbing trees or seeking refuge in the Railway Hotel; but this particular boy, who, as it subsequently appeared, had been borrowed at the last moment from the Methodist Sunday-school, and who had not attended the rehearsal, showed fight. He caught up a stick which happened to be at hand, and hit the first bear a resounding whack over the head, drawing from that astonished animal the exclamation, "By gosh!" Leaving the forty-one prostrate children, the incensed bear rose on his hind legs and hit the borrowed boy a beautiful blow straight from his shoulder. The two then rushed together and fought all over the stage, while the other bear, yielding to the excitement of the moment, encouraged his associate brute by loudly requesting him to "go in," and by offering to bet ten cents on his success with any one who might be willing to put up the money. The prophet, in view of the uproar, turned back, and belabored both bears and the borrowed boy with his stick with great impartiality, until all three cried for quarter. It was while he was engaged in this praiseworthy work that he accidentally knocked down the chandelier with his stick, and thereby created an alarm of fire, which speedily emptied the house, and brought the entertainment to a close.

The fathers of both bears have since sued the prophet for assault and battery, and the whole congregation is divided over the question whether the prophet had any right to thrash other people's bears in public, no matter if the latter had yielded to strong temptation to infuse an unexpected realism into the drama. However this may be decided, there is no doubt that the play was a failure, and it is to be hoped that it will have some little influence in inducing Sunday-school Superintendents to abstain from complicating religious instruction with amateur theatricals.

The modern custom of hanging out baskets on New Year's Day, to receive the cards of callers who are not admitted, is said to be a great help to many swindlers. The theft of baskets and cards is not so much a petty crab as a bit of portable property as a scheme to get possession of the cards of a large number of gentlemen. These visiting cards commonly have the addresses of the owners engraved on them. Armed with one of these, as a species of credential, sneak-thieves get into the houses marked for their visitation, and various opportunities for theft are commonly presented. With a card, (probably thus stolen,) a thief has been known to call at the residence of the gentleman to whom the card belonged, and ask for and receive a garment for which he pretended he had been sent for "in a great hurry." The card was exhibited as an evidence that the messenger had come from the owner of the garment. If householders desire to guard their friends from small conspiracies, they will duly protect their door-baskets next New Year's Day.

Mr. Edward Atkinson, in a letter to Mr. Zachariah Allen, of Providence, the founder of the system of mutual fire insurance as applied to factories, sets forth, with a clearness that is characteristic of him, the advantages of that system. Mr. Atkinson assumes that when the Boston Manufacturers' Mutual Company was started, a corporation took out policies in mutual companies on a cotton mill of 10,000 spindles at $11 per spindle, a total of $110,000. With the rate at 90 cents, the annual premium would be very nearly $1,000. The payments of 29 years would be $29,000. The dividends, ranging from nothing in 1856 to 100 per cent. in 1871, would have amounted to $18,590. Had the dividends been compounded at 5 per cent. annually, dividends and interest would have amounted to $20,356 72 in 1871, a sum which, at 5 per cent., would yield $1,000 annually, or enough to pay the premium; that is, in 21 years mutual insurance at 90 cents pays its own cost. The average dividend would have been 67½ per cent., and if this rate were to be continued until Dec. 1, 1897, the sum of the dividends compounded at 5 per cent. would be $110,547 65, from which it appears that mutual insurance yields the insurable value of the property insured in 46 years. When Mr. Allen established the system of mutual factory insurance, in 1835, stock insurance companies demanded from 1½ to 2½ per cent. premium for insuring cotton mills. The mutual companies have long been satisfied with 90 cents on $100. Most of the large manufactories of textile fabrics are now insured on that plan, and the sum saved to them by Mr. Allen's plan since its establishment, in 1835, must be enormous.

Last April we published an account of the Patrick estate, left a great many years ago in Suffolk, England, and estimated to be worth $80,000,000, along with the fact that a diligent effort was making to hunt up the proper heirs, many of whom are supposed to be Americans. The article attracted a good deal of attention, especially in Worcester County, Mass., where a number of Patrick families reside. Several members of these, being in indigent circumstances, when they heard of the estate, were at once seized with the idea that they were to be enriched. Their engaged lawyers to look up and establish their claim, and having been informed by a London circular of an agent of estates that property once owned by John Patrick was awaiting a claimant there, they felt confident that it belonged, at least in part, to them. In due time they learned all about it. John Patrick had been a driver in the Royal Artillery, and his property amounted to exactly £3 6s. 4d. Their disappointment and disgust were great; but after the shock had passed they were somewhat comforted to learn that that insignificant sum had nothing to do with the great Patrick estate, which, however, remained undiscovered up to last accounts. If it ever should be discovered, perhaps its $80,000,000 will dwindle down to $8,000, possibly to $800. It is remarkable what a hold the expectation of getting money out of some shadowy estate takes of the minds of very credulous persons. There are hundreds of these in the country, whose hearts are sick with deferred hope, but who still cling to the belief that their supposed heirship to some unclaimed estate will some day be recognized, and they will thus come into what they have grown to believe to be their own. Even people bearing so common names as Smith, Brown, and Robinson are actually looking for windfalls from such unsubstantial sources. This folly is stimulated and sustained by divers solicitors in London, who make a specialty of unclaimed estates, of lotteries, and the like, and who are constantly flooding the Republic with circulars, fac-simile letters, and recommendations of their business and successes. They assume to be particularly interested in American families of British descent, thinking, perchance, that we are more readily duped than Europeans are. A deal of money is spent, we may say wasted, here every twelve-month in a vain effort to gain something from indefinite English estates. So far as known, nobody has ever got enough in that way to pay the expense he has been put to. To expect anything is to indulge in self-delusion. Lawyers have made something out of the self deluded, but these have invariably suffered in purse, patience, and mental peace. Unclaimed estates should, as a rule, remained unclaimed by people pretending to common sense.

The question of the eligibility of a non-resident of Massachusetts to hold the office of Overseer of Harvard University occupied, as will be remembered, rather more public attention last Summer than the subject would seem to warrant. To state succinctly the issue involved is to say that many earnest friends of the university desired to increase its usefulness and give it a national character worthy of its age, wealth, and opportunities for the higher education. Under local influences and traditions, it was supposed to be an essential characteristic of successful management that only residents of Massachusetts were competent to administer the affairs of the university. A broader and more liberal policy had been successful at Yale, Princeton, Williams, and Amherst, but it was not until the New-York Club of Harvard Alumni put in nomination Dr. Henry W. Bellows, of New-York, and vigorously urged his election, that any definite movement to relieve Harvard of its provincial character was seriously attempted. The justice of the arguments used in the advocacy of this innovation were generally recognized here and elsewhere among the Alumni, (to whom is confided the power of electing Overseers,) and the result of the ballot was that Dr. Bellows was elected by the largest vote ever cast for an Overseer. It was at first supposed that there would be some obstacles interposed to the official confirmation of the decided expression conveyed by the vote given to Dr. Bellows, and that he would not be permitted to take his seat in the board. It is, however, a proof of the unselfish spirit, which in general enters into the administration of such trusts, that the authorities of the university have gracefully acquiesced in the decision which in this case was so strongly expressed. In the recently published official catalogue, Dr. Bellows's name appears among the Overseers. He has attended the four regular meetings of the board held since his election, and has served on two special committees to which he was appointed. One of the advantages which it was claimed would result from the presence in the Board of Overseers of members not living in Massachusetts was the interest they would excite in favor of the university among their fellow-citizens, whose attention would not otherwise be turned in this direction. A tangible proof of the justice of this claim has already been shown. Since his election to the board, Dr. Bellows has used his influence to secure the gift of forty thousand dollars, which sum has been paid to the Treasurer of the university for the benefit of one of its departments. It is hardly doubtful that much of the money which has been scattered ineffectively of late years through the mistaken zeal of generous men might have been turned into the treasury of Harvard, if its management had not been so essentially provincial. Some years ago it was found necessary, in view of the increasing number of students from the West, to hold examinations for admission in Cincinnati, and every Summer a corps of professors and tutors repairs to that city for this purpose. From other sections of the country the percentage of students has also greatly increased. The result is a constantly-growing body of Alumni who feel a deep interest in the college, and who naturally to be represented in its management. There can be no selfish motive in this desire. The office of Overseer is purely one of honor, and involves no small amount of labor, but the best friends of the institution, both in and out of Massachusetts, cannot fail to see that, with a few men of high character and personal influence serving as members of the board, and living outside of the charmed circle of Boston, an additional popularity will be given to the university.

PETERSBURG'S PROSPEROUS YEAR.

Petersburg, Va., Jan. 2.—Statistics show a decided increase of business here during the past year. The outlook is still more promising. The cotton factories form a very important part in the industrial interests of Petersburg. These have been unusually prosperous. In this city and vicinity there are five factories employing 715 operatives, whose consumption is 9,000 bales of cotton. During the year they manufactured 11,103,000 yards of cloth, which brought from 6 to 8 cents a yard, and was purchased chiefly by Northern jobbers.

GENERAL NOTES.

The Waterbury (Conn.) American calls Garcelon and his Council "the kicko-Maine-ians."

The Indiana Democrats are talking of holding their State Convention on St. Patrick's Day.

The Vermont Republican State Committee is to meet at Vergennes on Wednesday next to decide upon the time and place of the State Convention.

The Elmira Advertiser, a carefully-edited Republican journal, changed to the quarto form on New Year's Day, saying that a paper might as well be out of the world as out of the fashion.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union of Boston is circulating a petition in favor of a law extending to women the right to vote upon the question of granting licenses to sell liquor.

The Niagara Falls Gazette says that it has been ascertained that the elderly man who threw himself from the new suspension bridge, on the 24th ult., was S. A. Sykes, of Kennedy, Chautauqua County, and that late season he was engaged in arranging excursion parties to Prospect Park, Niagara Falls. His body has not been recovered.

A writer in the Bismarck (Dakota) Tribune argues that railroads and their operations are among the greatest sources of increased rain-fall in countries reported arid; and expresses the opinion that they have already changed the climate along the Northern Pacific Railroad, and that the same effect will follow railroad construction everywhere in the North-west.

The Richmond (Va.) State says: "Our Board of State Canvassers, all but one of whom have been turned out of office, might easily have found enough technicalities in the returns to have counted out the Republicans and Readjuster Funionists, and that, too, without at all stretching any of the points of the law, and the State would have been kept in the hands of the Conservatives; and, even though it had caused violence and tumult, they could have rightly maintained themselves in this great wrong, and much better than Garcelon in Maine. But they never once thought of perpetrating a crime of this enormity."

AMUSEMENTS.

GENERAL MENTION.

At the Standard Theatre, Mr. Clay's opera, "The Princess Toto," will be given this afternoon and evening.

It is now believed that the opening of the Madison-Square Theatre will take place toward the end of this month.

The "Pirates of Penzance," which has won a decided success, will be performed at the matinée and in the evening at the Fifth-avenue Theatre.

"She Stoops to Conquer" will be played at Wallack's Theatre twice to-day. It will be succeeded next Monday evening by "A Scrap of Paper."

The last performances of "Hearts of Steel," at Niblo's Garden, and of "The Strategists," at the Broadway Opera-house, will be given this afternoon and evening.

The two final performances of "The Galley Slave" at Haverly's Theatre will be given to-day. On Monday evening Mr. Campbell's play will be transferred to the stage of Niblo's Garden.

"The Royal Middy" is almost ready for production at Daly's Theatre, and will probably be brought out there in about 10 days. Miss Catharine Lewis will be Rancheite, the hero, and Miss May Fielding will reappear in this place.

A comic military opera entitled "F. L. G." will be produced at the Broadway Opera-house next week. This piece has already been produced in Philadelphia, where it won very favorable mention. Its comedy is said to be novel and amusing, and its music gay and popular.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" will be played this afternoon at the Aquarium; "Fairfax" at the Park Theatre; "The Hardback Family" at the San Francisco Minstrels; "French Flats" at the Union-Square Theatre; "An Arabian Night" at Daly's, and "The Mulligan Guards' Christmas" at the Théâtre Comique.

A special performance for the benefit of Mr. Robert Stickney and Mr. Frank Melville will be given at the New-York Circus this evening. The regular company will be augmented on this pleasant occasion by several volunteers, who wish to pay their respects to the beneficiaries. At the matinée to-day "Humpty Dumpty" will be performed as usual.

Herr Josefly is announced for his last concert at present at Chickering Hall to-night. The programme is one of decided interest, and chiefly so from the fact that it affords Herr Josefly an opportunity to be heard again with an orchestra. Piano recitals are well enough in their way, but an artist of Josefly's brilliant talents cannot be heard in solos only with entire justice to himself. The orchestra, composed of the best musicians of the City, will play Von Weber's "Euryanthe" overture, and the other three numbers of the programme will be Chopin's E minor concerto, by Herr Josefly, the F minor concerto of the same composer, performed for the first time by Josefly, and Chopin's andante spianato and polonaise, op. 22, for piano and orchestra.

SENATOR CHANDLER'S WILL.

ITS UNEXPECTED FINDING AMONG JUDGE EDMUNDS'S PAPERS—ITS TERMS.

From the Detroit (Mich.) Post, Jan. 1.

After the death of Senator Chandler no will could be found among his papers, and the family reached the conclusion that he left none. A petition was accordingly filed in the Probate Court for the appointment of Administrators for his estate, and that petition was to have been acted upon yesterday. But after the death of Judge Edmunds, at Washington, an overhauling of his papers brought to light a will made by Mr. Chandler in 1865. It was sent on to Detroit, and was filed for probate yesterday morning. It is a very brief document, upon one side of a single half-sheet of legal-cap paper, and reads as follows:

I, Zachariah Chandler, of Detroit, in the County of Wayne, and State of Michigan, do make and publish this my last will and testament.

I give, devise, and bequeath to my wife, Letitia Grace Chandler, and to my daughter, Mary Douglass Chandler, all the estate, real or personal, of which I shall be seized or possessed, or to which I shall be entitled at the time of my decease, and all my property of every nature and nature whatsoever, to be equally divided between them, share and share alike.

And I hereby appoint Charles Ducharme, Allan Sheldon, and George Jerome, of said Detroit, Executors of this my last will and testament.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand this 31st day of March, 1865. Z. CHANDLER.

Signed by the said testator, Zachariah Chandler, as and for his last will and testament, and declared by him to be such on the day and year above written, in the presence of us, who, at his request, in his sight and presence and in the presence of each other, have hereunto subscribed our names as attesting witnesses. NATIONAL CAPITAL NEWS.

A DECREASE IN THE PUBLIC DEBT.

ROUGH AND A QUARTER MILLIONS LESS THAN ON DEC. 1—DETAILS OF THE JANUARY FINANCIAL EXHIBIT.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—The decrease in the public debt for December was, in round numbers, $4,251,000. This, added to the $800,000 surplus for November, enabled the Secretary of the Treasury to ask proposals for the sale of $5,000,000 of 6 per cent. bonds for the use of the sinking fund. The Treasurer's statement of liabilities and assets for December, shows a large decrease in the available balances compared with the same statement for November. The gold and bullion account, after deducting paid certificates outstanding and amount due for called bonds and interest due and unpaid, is $108,329,064, a decrease of over $15,000,000 compared with the statement for the preceding month. The aggregate assets in silver dollars show little change. The silver dollars on hand increased during the month about $300,000, which shows that about $1,700,000 of the amount coined in December were put in circulation. There is an increase for the month in outstanding silver certificates of over $1,600,000. That portion of the available cash now on hand, made up of silver dollars, including silver certificates and silver bullion, is $53,800,000, against $35,300,000 on Dec. 1. The balance in United States notes has fallen off over $7,000,000. The total assets in United States and national bank notes now on hand is $37,441,671, and the liabilities outstanding against that amount are $29,986,041, leaving the available balance in this form of cash $7,455,630. On Dec. 1 this balance was $14,959,955. Deducting all current liabilities leaves the available cash balance now on hand $143,226,207, a falling off of $9,590,961 compared with the same balance on Dec. 1.

The Customs receipts for December were $12,539,932, an increase of over $4,000,000 compared with the corresponding month of last year. The receipts from internal revenue for last month were nearly $11,000,000, an increase over December, 1878, of over $1,500,000.

THE UTE NEGOTIATIONS.

GEN. HATCH STILL HOPEFUL OF THE SURRENDER OF THE GUILTY INDIANS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—Secretary Schurz, at a late hour to-night, received a telegram from Gen. Hatch, dated Lake City, to-day. It reports that he has brought "several Indian chiefs" from the reservation to Lake City with him; that they remained with him for the purpose of preventing any demonstration by the young men of the tribe; that he desires to take them to the military camp at Garland, and, if deemed advisable, to send one of them back to see whether the surrender cannot still be effected. He expresses hope that this may yet be accomplished. The dispatch also refers to the subject of rations, but does not clear up the uncertainty in which his former dispatches have left the department as to whether or not he had refused to issue rations. Secretary Schurz replied to-night by telegraph, requesting Gen. Hatch to furnish information upon the following points, viz.: Whether the White River Utes offered for surrender are still in Ouray's power, or whether they have been released; also, what chiefs are with Gen. Hatch, and of what bands; also, whether there is any prospect of Gen. Hatch now getting into his possession Chief Douglass and the men of Douglass, and other culprits of importance who were recently offered for surrender. His proposition to take the Indians now with him to Camp Garland is approved, and, as he expresses a hope that the complete surrender may still be accomplished, he is requested to say what, in his opinion, can be done by direction of the Washington authorities to aid him. In conclusion, Secretary Schurz telegraphs that he will send to Gen. Hatch a dispatch to be read to the Indian delegation, and also to the Indians at the reservation, immediately after his answer to the foregoing inquiries shall have been received.

NOTES FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2, 1880.

The Treasury Department announces a purchase of 189,000 ounces of silver for the Philadelphia Mint.

Chairman Atkins, of the House Committee on Appropriations, is improving slowly. Although he is a great sufferer, his physicians do not apprehend a serious result unless the erysipelas should strike in, and of this there is at present no apparent danger.

In the Treasury circular of Jan. 1, 1880, prohibiting the estimates of value of foreign coins in the United States money, the values of the silver coins are computed at their bullion value, compared with the "gold dollar as the unit of value," and the following figures fixed the values as owned in the calendar of 1879, viz.: The American dollar is estimated at 41 5-10 cents; the dollar of Central America, United States of Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Bolivia, is reduced from 97 8-10 to 92 6-10 cents; the dollar of Mexico from 99 1-10 to 93 6-10 cents; the pesos of Iquique from 75 to 69 7-10 cents; the ruble of Russia from 74 8-10 to 66 9-10 cents; the mulhed of Tripoli from 84 4-10 to 74 6-10 cents; the gold florin of the Netherlands is taken as the monetary unit at 40 2-10 cents.

The United States Consul-General at Rio de Janeiro, in a dispatch dated Nov. 29, 1879, says: "The traders from the United States, who arrive by every steamer from New-York, manifest industry and enterprise. The imports from Great Britain during the last year amounted to about $12,000,000; from France, $6,000,000, and from the United States about $4,000,000. Of the 453,724 barrels of flour imported, 304,954 barrels were from the United States. The chief export to the United States was coffee, valued at $30,000,000. Of the 1,456 foreign vessels entering the harbor of Rio only 171 were American.

The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to-day ordered a reargument of the Louisiana Lottery case, before a full bench of six Justices, at the next general term. No action will be taken on the application for an injunction against the Postmaster-General until after the rehearing. In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives calling upon the Postmaster-General for evidence and information respecting the extent to which lottery companies make use of the mails, the department is now preparing a comprehensive statement on that subject to be transmitted to the House soon after the reassembling of Congress; and accompanying it, the Postmaster-General will send a list of about 150 fraudulent enterprises of various kinds, which, during the past year, have been denied the privileges of the registry and money-order systems. A number of these have been wholly excluded from the use of the mails, on the ground that all the names advertised in connection with them are fictitious.

OBITUARY.

MORRIS KETCHUM.

Mr. Morris Ketchum, the well-known banker, died on New Year's Day at his home, No. 19 Washington-square, in this City, aged 84 years. He was born in Saratoga County, and his father, Amos Ketchum, was one of the original settlers of that part of the State. He came to this City when a boy, and at the age of 18 he went to Savannah and opened an office there as a commission merchant. Three years later he returned to New-York and joined his father in the cotton brokerage business. He afterward formed a copartnership with the subsequent founder of the Rogers Locomotive Works, and with Jasper Grosvenor, under the firm name of Ketchum, Rogers & Grosvenor, for the manufacture of locomotives. This business was abandoned later for the banking business, the firm retaining the same style. On the death of Mr. Grosvenor, it became Ketchum, Rogers & Bement, and subsequently Ketchum, Howe & Co. On the withdrawal of Mr. Howe, Mr. Ketchum took his son into partnership, and the style was changed to Ketchum, Son & Co. The house was one of the most successful in the business, having the largest Western connections of any banking firm in the City. Its members all acquired immense fortunes, and Mr. Ketchum himself was regarded as among the wealthiest, as well as one of the most public-spirited, of New-York's millionaires. In politics he was a warm advocate of Republican principles, and he was a patriot of the staunchest type. Throughout the war of the rebellion he never failed to give strong support to the Government. Secretary Chase, who was his personal friend, was indebted to his influence probably more than any other man's for his ability to place the Government loans in this City. In 1861 Mr. Ketchum, seeing that many of the City banks were disposed to withhold their aid, took the entire first loan that was offered himself. In 1864, when a disagreement among the Directors threatened to force the Fourth National Bank into liquidation, Mr. Ketchum was chosen as the compromise candidate for President, and by his ability soon carried the institution through the troublous times. He resigned this position in January, 1865, and in August of that year his firm, through no fault of his own, fell into financial difficulties. In this crisis Mr. Ketchum voluntarily sacrificed his entire private fortune, and thus effected an honorable settlement with his creditors. The widespread sympathy which his misfortunes aroused, and the general admiration felt for his action subsequently resulted to his benefit. In 1867, through the influence of friends with whom he had previously had dealings, he was enabled to go to Europe and found the Sovereign Bank and Trust Company, of which he was one of the Directors at the time of his death. His indomitable pluck and energy made of this venture a success, and he soon regained a competency. Among the enterprises which owe their origin to him is the Illinois Central Railroad, which, despite much opposition and discouragement, he projected, and carried to completion, advancing the money out of his own pocket for the building of the road.

Mr. Ketchum survived two wives, sisters named Burr, who resided at Westport, Fairfield County. Down among them he became possessed of about 100 acres of wild rolling land about a mile north of of the village of Westport. He added to this by purchase from time to time and expended a large sum in improving it until it is now a handsome park of between 500 and 600 acres. His third wife was the daughter of Judge Sylvanus Miller, of this City. He also leaves five sons and two daughters. One of the latter is the wife of Dr. Willard Parker, Jr., and the other of Israel Corse, the Gold-street leather dealer.

OBITUARY NOTES.

Alderman William I. Underhill, a prominent politician of Newburg, N. Y., is dead.

May Alcott Niericker, the youngest daughter of A. Bronson Alcott, and sister of Louisa M. Alcott, died suddenly at Paris on Dec. 30. She had long been devoted to art, and at one time was a student of the late William M. Hunt. Most of her pictures are scenes of quiet life. She has published valuable hints to art students in "Studying Art Abroad, and How to Do It Cheaply." She was married to Ernest Niericker, the son of a Swiss banker, and leaves an infant daughter.

Mr. Jameson H. Savage, a woolen importer, of this City, died on New Year's Day at his residence, No. 222 Fifth-avenue. Mr. Savage was born in North Carolina, nearly 50 years ago, and when a young man began his business career in New-York. He was at one time in charge of the woolen department of A. T. Stewart & Co., and subsequently started in business on his own account. Mr. Savage was respected in mercantile circles. The funeral will take place at 11 A. M. to-day from St. Thomas's Church, on Fifth-avenue.

EUROPEAN FACTS AND GOSSIP.

The Spelling Reform Association in England has received 20 schemes from their authors in response to an invitation, and others are awaited.

A new improved penny stamp is to be issued by the British postal authorities, of a lighter color than the old, and printed in a fugitive pigment so that it cannot be used again.

The sale of the "first portion" of the library of the late Dr. Laing, which recently occupied 11 days at a London auction-room, realized $13,288 8s. 6d. Among the high prices noted are $120 for the first edition of Spenser's "Faerie Queen," $133 for a collection of "Scotch Broadside Ballads," $100 for Reye's "Doctrinal de Sapience," in the Catalan dialect, and $72 8s. for Ritson's works.

A locksmith has just been fined 50 francs by the Correctional Tribunal of the Seine, Paris, for having broken a tailor's jaw. The too confiding tailor, suffering from toothache, having heard of the locksmith's skill as a dentist, went to him to be relieved of his teeth and the pain it caused him, when the self-dismal dentist, after having drawn, or rather torn out, the strong tooth, succeeded in starting three more and breaking the tailor's jaw.

The Continental Gazette of Paris says: "We are happy to state that the condition of Mr. John P. Howard, whose serious illness we announced in our columns a fortnight ago, is improving. The paralysis from which Mr. Howard has been suffering was rendered even more obstinate by the severity of the weather; but we are glad, nevertheless, to convey the intelligence of a generally satisfactory condition, which leaves the hope that Mr. Howard may be perfectly restored to health in the course of a few weeks."

Prince Reuss-Köstritz Heinrich XX., whose romantic marriage at Heligoland last Summer with Mlle. Clotilde Lotmet, of stress fame, created a mild sensation, has, according to the Official Journal of the Principality of Reuss of the Younger Line, resigned his name and title as a Prince of Reuss-Köstritz. The reigning Prince of that house has created him a Baron, under the name of Harry, Baron von Reichenfels. The Baron and ex-Prince has, as has been already stated, recently married the Princess Ferdinandine, of Bulgaria, whose sovereign was formerly his comrade in the Prussian Army, and who has now appointed him one of his Aides-de-Camp.

A correspondent of the Paris Figaro tells a sad story of an actor's death. It occurred at the Batignolles, on the first night of the patriotic drama, "Hoche." One of the parts, that of an old miser, was played by an aged actor called Lucas. Lucas had been long ill, but he refused to retire his part, and made his entry as best he might, working his way from chair to chair, and stammering his speeches rather than carrying them. He had to feign alarm at the progress of a riot by which he was threatened with the loss of his money, and he was applauded to the echo. In the next act the Bastile cannon sound, and the miser, despairing of his treasures, has to fall into the arms of somebody near him. Lucas fell, as his one obliged him, but he fell to rise no more. Five minutes after he was dead.

The North British Mail says: "Mr. Carlyle has joined the committee which has been formed to secure the election of Sir A. Hobhouse and Mr. John Morley for Westminster. This is the first occasion on which Mr. Carlyle has decisively taken a side with either of the great parties in the State, and the fact that he has done so is a striking evidence of the aversion which Lord Beaconsfield's policy has produced in the greatest minds of the country. Mr. Froude, whose sympathies are in the main Conservative, has also added his name to the committee, which includes Mr. Darwin, Mr. Leslie Stephen, Prof. Huxley, Mr. Moncure Conway, and others. In fact, the genius of the Liberal Election Committee of Westminster are themselves evidence of a great intellectual revolt against the policy of the present Ministry.

THE BLACKS IN THE WEST

FINDING GOOD HOMES AND SUPPLYING A NEED.

ABSURDITY OF THE INDIANA DEMOCRATIC SCARE—THE EMIGRANTS FROM NORTH CAROLINA DOING WELL AND URGING THEIR FRIENDS TO JOIN THEM—A LARGE DEMAND FOR COLORED LABORERS.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 2.—Up to the present time 800 colored people, from North Carolina, have arrived in Indiana. One-fourth of these are voters, or will be when they have qualified under the laws of the State. If the immigration continues at the present rate, about as many more will have arrived by the expiration of the time in which they can qualify for next Fall's election. The profound Democratic scare over the alleged Republican attempt to flood the State with blacks, and overcome the Democratic majority, is based upon the arrival of 100, possibly 200, colored voters. It is altogether likely that, during the past year, more young and active men, mostly Republicans, have emigrated to States and Territories further west, than the number of colored men who have arrived in Indiana from the South.

The results of an extended investigation of the exodus, to be printed here to-morrow, will show that since the arrival of the first party from North Carolina, eight weeks ago, between 700 and 800 negroes of all ages and sexes have entered Indiana. Of these, about 200 have been sent to Putnam County, between 150 and 160 have gone to Montgomery, about 50 have found homes in Hancock, 35 in Hamilton, 50 in Clay, 25 in Shelby, 40 in Hendricks, 25 in Tippecanoe, 20 in Delaware, 30 in Wayne, 25 in Randolph, 20 in Cass, 25 in Howard, and about 50 still remain in Marion, in and about Indianapolis. These numbers, of course, are approximated, but they indicate the counties and about the dimensions of each colony. The distribution has been managed through the medium of the colored churches. The Rev. Perry Williams, the pioneer immigrant, visited Greencastle, for example, and interested the Pastor and members of the church there. Others went elsewhere and did the same thing. The way has also been opened by correspondence. Farmers desiring laborers have written to Indianapolis for them, and families have been sent as directed. Thus, in one way or another, but principally through the medium of the churches, the blacks have been scattered over the State, each group forming a nucleus about which others are certain to gather. As soon as a family becomes settled, the first wish is to have their friends and relatives with them. Very naturally, letters are sent back to the old North State, describing their own happy condition and urging others to follow, and thus the desire to emigrate to Indiana spreads.

The charge that Hoosier emissaries are laboring in North Carolina to induce the blacks to go to Indiana is denied by the people who have arrived. The Rev. Mr. Williams answers the question why they came to Indiana without hesitation or reserve. "After laboring and economizing for 14 years," he says, "my people find themselves as poor, and ignorant, and despised as they were at the close of the war—a condition differing from absolute slavery only in this, that they are now at liberty to emigrate without being hunted down by bloodhounds." The policy of emigrating, therefore, has long been the principal topic of conversation at the firesides, in the prayer-meeting, and at public gatherings. As a result of it, small emigration societies have been organized in many of the counties, collections taken, and plans matured, that at the proper time an exodus might begin. During the past Summer, aroused by the Mississippi emigration, these arrangements were vigorously pushed, and by September enough money had been collected by the Lagrange Society to defray the expenses of a single delegate, who should go as far west as Indiana or Illinois to find suitable places to locate, until such time as they might be able to go upon Government lands. Mr. Williams was chosen such representative, and being a minister of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, he stopped at points having similar churches, to whose Pastors he confided his mission. From these he took letters of introduction to others further on, and in this way reached Indianapolis. There he found a large colored population, who entered readily into the plans of their Southern brethren. They organized local relief committees, turned colored churches into hotels, and canvassed the city for means to feed and help all who should come. Thus Indianapolis became a depot to which all might congregate and thence be distributed wherever laborers were needed. Capt. Langsdale, editor of the Greencastle Banner, volunteered to aid in finding homes for all who should come. But beyond receiving and answering letters, Mr. Langsdale finds that his services are not needed. The Rev. John H. Clay, Pastor of the colored church, has stood at the wheel and guided the affair. Colored people take entire control of the matter. The assistance of white men, beyond giving money to feed the immigrants on their arrival, has neither been sought nor needed, and to charge the movement upon Republicans is quite as absurd as to argue that Democratic opposition to their coming is keeping them away.

That there is a demand for the labor of these people is made evident by the number of applications that come from all parts of Indiana, and from the adjoining States of Ohio and Illinois. Mr. Langsdale receives a handful of these letters every day. The Rev. Messrs. Clay and Williams, at Greencastle, have their pockets full. Mr. Trevan, of Indianapolis, is equally burdened with applications, as is every one else whose name is mentioned in connection with the movement. Farmers want them. The plan of having two or three hired men, with their families, settling on a farm, in little homes of their own, is a new one in Indiana. In Winter or Summer their labor can be depended upon. If sickness enters the farmer's home, colored nurses are at hand. The women, too, can milk and wash and make gardens. If necessary, they can go into the field or take care of the stock. Their children can run errands and do the lighter work. Thus a farmer becomes independent of all outsiders. Said one farmer the other day: "I would take them even if ordinary farm laborers were plenty, which they are not." When asked why farm hands were not plenty, he replied: "Because for many years there has been a steady flow of young men from the rural districts to the towns and cities. They either dislike farm work or want higher wages than we can pay. More than this, a good man usually leases a farm and works for himself, just as soon as he can find one. The Western fever subjects us to another drain, carrying our sons into the newer States, where land is plentier and cheaper. No less than 500 young men have thus been withdrawn from Putnam County alone within the past few years. The coming of these colored families, therefore, is a necessity, and is solving the labor question for the rural districts."

Mr. Langsdale gives it as his opinion that there is need in Indiana of the labor of between 10,000 and 20,000 colored men, such as have already come from North Carolina. This opinion was based, he said, upon his experience in providing homes for those who had come here, and upon interviews and correspondence with many farmers of all parts of the State. The demand for household help, he continued, is about the same. Girls and women who know how and are willing to do such work can find homes in the best families. Indeed, their coming would be an absolute blessing to the wives and daughters, who, in many families, are now overworked. This is especially true in the country.

As to the assertion of Mr. Voorhees that Indiana is already fully populated, and needs no more immigrants, white or black, the maps and census show that fully one-third of the State is unsettled. In Newton, Jasper, Lake, Starke, White, Pulaski, and Benton Counties, in the northern tier, and in many of the thinly-populated districts in the south, good farms can be bought for $15 or $25 per acre. One man has 1,800 acres for sale in Knox County, very near the home of Gov. Williams, and is unable as yet to get $18 an acre. Much of it is good bottom land, and none of it is poor. Upon it are four good houses, with barns and outhouses complete. Such bargains can be found in a majority of the counties. These facts are being communicated by the refugees to their friends in North Carolina, and from this time until the demand for laborers is supplied a steady influx of colored people is expected.

THE STATEN ISLAND BRIBERY CASE.

The case of W. W. Corbett, a Custom-house officer, against Henry Ainsley, a blind inmate of the Sailors' Snug Harbor, Staten Island, was before Justice Johnson, at Port Richmond, Staten Island, yesterday. Ainsley was charged with having stated that just before the election Messrs. Fiske, Corbett, and other candidates were on the Harbor grounds, and then Mr. Fiske was in consultation, in the Captain's room, with other persons. After ex-Justice Emmons had produced a copy of Ainsley's testimony before him, Mr. Oliver Fiske gave his testimony, to the effect that Ainsley's testimony as to a conversation between Messrs. Fiske and Humphrey was not true "in any particular." He further testified that he was not at the Sailors' Snug Harbor during the last year, nor did he pay a cent for any one's vote during the last election. Mr. Corbett corroborated Mr. Fiske's testimony, and Mr. Ainsley testified that he had not seen Mr. Fiske at the Harbor, nor had Mr. Corbett ever offered him money to vote any ticket. Justice Johnson dismissed the case with an admonition to the prisoner to be more careful in his statements hereafter. The original investigation concerning the alleged bribery of voters at the Sailors' Snug Harbor is to be begun by Justice Garrett on Tuesday at 10 A. M.

ATHLETIC SPORTS.

WINTER GAMES OF THE COLUMBIA COLLEGE BOAT CLUB.

Madison-Square Garden was filled last evening with ladies and gentlemen who had assembled to witness the beginning of the second annual "Winter games" of the Columbia College Boat Club, which will be concluded this evening. Representatives of various athletic clubs of this City and elsewhere were entered in competition with the Columbia College men, and the contests were spirited and the visitors were enthusiastically applauded and cheered. The general interest in the sports was unflagging, excellent music was furnished by Meyer's brass band, and the occasion was made in every way enjoyable. The programme consisted of running and walking matches, bicycle races, and a "tug of war" between rival teams of the Seventh and Ninth Regiments, National Guard. The first race was a handicap run of 75 yards, in which 22 young men were entered. There were six heats, all hotly contested. The winner of the first heat was L. A. Stuart, of the Athletic Club of the College of the City of New-York, his time being 0:08¼, and the second man was John Willard, of New-Haven. W. J. Crowley, of the Staten Island Athletic Club, won the second heat in 0:08, and S. B. Rothschilds, of the Manhattan Athletic Club, was second. George W. Parker, of the Knickerbocker Club, was the winner of the fourth heat, in 0:07¾, and W. R. Beers was second. In the fifth heat, J. M. Izquirol, of the Putnam Athletic Club, was the winner, in 0:7¾, and J. B. White, of the Essex Athletic Club, was second. Charles R. Kearney, of the Union Boat Club, won the sixth heat, in 0:08, and H. J. Barringer, of the Putnam Club, was second.

The next event was a half-mile run, for college men, in which there were four starters. This race was very interesting, and was regarded as one of the best things of the evening. Mr. G. H. Taylor and T. H. Simmons, the audience were not long in discovering, were the chief contestants, and toward the last Taylor was pretty close at Simmons's heels. He finally made a magnificent effort, and passed Simmons by a few lengths, winning the race in 2:10¾.

Next came a handicap walk of one mile, in which there were 11 starters, more or less handicapped. It was a pretty match, exciting much enthusiasm, and was won by John Wilson, of the Williamsburg Athletic Club, in 7:56 2-5. J. A. Breslin of the American Athletic Club, who was well handicapped, being declared second.

A 75-yard scratch run, in which there were two heats, resulted as follows: First heat—Winner, J. E. Jenkins, of the Westchester Lacrosse Club; time, 0:09⅞; second man, W. J. Crowley, Staten Island Club. Second heat—Winner, L. A. Stuart, Knickerbocker Club; time, 0:08½; second man, G. E. Smith.

The third heat of a two-mile bicycle race, in which there were three starters, was won by John Faley, of the Greenpoint Athletic Club, in 8:17¾, the second man being William M. Wright, of the Short Hills Athletic Club.

Next followed a 220-yard hurdle-race, for college men, which was won by L. A. Stuart, of the College of the City of New-York Athletic Association, Elliot Marshall, of Columbia College, coming in second.

Christopher Ranhoffer, of the Empire City Athletic Club, won the next race, a one-mile handicap walk, (with a limit of 15 seconds) in 7:37, and J. R. Clark, of the Eclipse Athletic Club, was second.

Two heats in a quarter-mile-run handicap came next, the winners and second-best men being as follows: First heat—Winner, G. R. Smith, of the American Club; time, 0:57¼; No. 2, R. Levis, New-York. Second heat—Winner, O. H. Aldridge, New-York Club; time, 0:59; No. 2, H. G. Badgely, American Club.

The second heat of the two-mile bicycle race followed. In it were entered L. H. Burridge, of New-York; R. E. Johnson, of the Essex Bicycle Club, and J. Ralfe, of the Zephyr Club, London, England. The race was exciting, and Mr. Ralfe, during its progress, fell from his bicycle, but was not appearently hurt, as he soon afterward remounted it, and although beaten by L. H. Johnson, whose time was 6:39¾, showed that he was a good racer.

A one-mile run, handicap, for college men, resulted in the victory, as it was decided by the judges, of William R. Travers, Jr., his time being 5:08⅘. A. L. Hall, of the Harvard Athletic Club, came in so close after the winner, that it was difficult for the Grand observers to decide who had won, and some of the spectators claimed that it was a "dead heat."

The representative teams of the Ninth and Seventh Regiments, National Guard, contested for superiority in the "tug of war," which resulted in a decisive victory for the Seventh. The men composing its team were selected from Company B.

After the "tug of war" came two heats of the 220-yard run, for college men, which resulted as follows: Winner of the first heat, R. J. Wendall, of the Harvard Club; time, 0:29⅘; No. 2, F. L. Emmons, College of the City of New-York. In second heat, winner, E. W. Brown, Columbia Boat Club; time—0:29⅞. No. 2, Walter A. Stebbins, Phillips Exira Association.

The games closed with a 75-yard scratch-run by the winners of trial heats. It resulted in the triumph of J. E. Jenkins, Jr., of the Westchester Lacrosse Club, whose time was 0:08. L. A. Stuart, of the Knickerbocker Club and the College of the City of New-York Association, was the second-best man. This afternoon, at 1 o'clock, there will be a 30-mile relay race between Columbia College and the College of the City of New-York, and the programme for this evening is varied and very full.

SLANDER AND SUICIDE.

THE TROUBLE CAUSED BY A MAN'S ATTACKS UPON A WIDOW'S REPUTATION.

CONEY, Penn., Jan. 2.—The case of Mrs. Addie H. Byham against Andrew Lampo to recover damages on a charge of slander, which was tried two weeks ago in the Crawford County Court, but which never reached a verdict, owing to the tragic death of the defendant, is likely to have a sequel which will reopen all the questions and awaken renewed interest in the matter. Andrew Lampo was a prominent and well-to-do farmer of the Town of Fairfield, Crawford County. Adjoining the Lampo farm is the Widow Byham place, occupied by its owner, Mrs. Addie H. Byham. Mrs. Byham's reputation was never questioned until about two years ago, when stories of a most damaging nature began to be circulated through the community. These were to the effect that Mrs. Byham was maintaining illicit relations with Andrew Lampo, the fact having been discovered by Mrs. Lampo. Details of the manner in which the intimacy had been discovered, and of the sums of money Lampo had squandered on the widow, furnished food for the gossips of that part of Crawford County for weeks.

The origin of these stories, which were all indignantly denied by Mrs. Byham, was finally traced to Andrew Lampo himself, and as he insisted on their truth and refused to make a retraction of any of them, Mrs. Byham sued Lampo for slander, laying her damages at $10,000. The case came up for trial on Dec. 18, at Meadville. All the evidence was taken in one day, and the defendant failed to establish the truth of any of his charges against the plaintiff. His own son-in-law was a witness against him. Lampo went home Thursday evening. The Sunday previous to the trial, according to Mrs. Lampo, her husband gave her a sealed letter which he told her to have read in court in case anything happened to him. On Thursday evening, about 10 o'clock, Mr. Lampo went out to his barn, saying that he thought he heard one of the horses kicking. He had been gone some time when his wife says she happened to think of what he had said when he handed her the sealed letter, and she became alarmed. She went out to the barn and found her husband hanging by his neck, dead, in the haymow. He was cut down and taken into the house.

The letter he gave his wife is a confession, in which he solemnly affirms the truth of all he ever said about Mrs. Byham; calls her a "bold, bad woman," and charges her with having tempted him to his fall, and with trying to ruin him. He also charges that she was on terms of criminal intimacy with other men in the neighborhood, naming several prominent citizens, and mentioning one woman. This confession is believed by some to have been the work of Mrs. Lampo, and Mrs. Byham having stated her belief that it was never written by the deceased man, but that his name had been forged to it by his wife, and having made other emphatic statements reflecting on the standing of Mrs. Lampo, the latter has taken the preliminary steps in a suit for slander against the widow. The affair has created a great sensation in Crawford and adjoining counties, where the persons are all known.

MATTERS IN CUBA.

HAVANA, Jan. 2.—An official dispatch announces that on Dec. 31, there surrendered at Holguin, Col. Feria, the Adjutant-General of Peralta, with one chief, three officers, and 45 men, being the remainder of a force, of whom a part, with Peralta himself, surrendered a short time ago.

A heavy fire has destroyed the cane fields on the plantation called "Soberu," near Quivicas. The indications are that the fire was caused by incendiaries.

BARIRON RATES INCREASED.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Jan. 2.—At a meeting of the Western Iron Association this afternoon, it was decided to advance the card rates on bar iron to 3½ cents per pound, on and after Monday next. This will also increase the wages of the puddlers.

A TOWN TREASURER MISSING.

BOSTON, Jan. 2.—The Journal states that Daniel Emerson, Treasurer of the Town of Everett, Mass., is missing, but there is no reason to believe that he is a defaulter, though an investigation is being made.

A RECEIVER APPOINTED

STEPHEN V. WHITE IN CHARGE OF THE GROCERS' BANK.

THE ANNOUNCEMENT OF THE SUSPENSION RECEIVED WITH ASTONISHMENT AND INDIGNATION BY THE DEPOSITORS—THE BANK'S LAST QUARTERLY STATEMENT.

The announcement in THE TIMES of yesterday that the Directors of the Grocers' Bank had decided to apply for a Receiver and go into liquidation caused a large crowd of astonished depositors to visit the bank in Barclay-street yesterday, and during business hours the bank was practically in a state of siege. A notice was posted on the closed doors early in the morning to the effect that, owing to embarrassments caused by the failure of J. Lloyd Haigh, the bank was closed, that depositors would be paid in full, and that a statement of the condition of the bank would be furnished as soon as possible. The doors were not opened until 9:30 o'clock, by which time the steps had become packed with persons anxious to get into the building. From that time until the close of the banking hours the space reserved for customers outside of the railing was filled with depositors. At the request of the Board of Directors, at which it was decided to close up the bank, it was decided that Mr. Stephen V. White, of No. 9 Wall-street, should be recommended for the appointment of Receiver, and yesterday a petition, signed by President Denison, George Henrique, and Cashier Parham, stockholders of the bank, asking for such appointment, was presented to Judge Gilbert, of the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, and the Judge immediately appointed Mr. White to the office, requiring him to furnish bonds in $100,000. The petitioners declare that the bank had a paid-up capital of $225,000, divided into 7,500 shares of $30 each, and that its liabilities to creditors are $970,000, to pay which the bank has not adequate resources. It is understood that Mr. White will assume charge of the bank's affairs to-day.

The Directors held a long meeting in a rear room yesterday. Vice-President Leventritt moved that a committee of depositors be appointed to examine into the state of the bank's affairs, declaring that in his opinion there was no sufficient cause for the closing of the bank. In the meantime, the Receiver had qualified for his office, and Mr. Leventritt's motion was objected to on the ground that, as the bank was in the hands of a Receiver, the Directors could do nothing. The objection was sustained, and the Vice-President's motion was lost. This decision left the Directors nothing to do but to adjourn, and this they did. The Cashier made a statement to the crowd, and declared that the assets of the bank were as good now as they were when the last quarterly statement, made Dec. 13, 1879, was issued, with the single exception of the loss occasioned by the failure of J. Lloyd Haigh. He had no doubt that every depositor would be paid in full. A loud call was made for the December statement, and little slips were handed out, as follows:

One of the depositors, a prominent Hebrew of this City, glanced over the slip, and then said to the Cashier: "If your statement is true, that the assets of the bank are as good now as then, even if you have lost $100,000 by Haigh's failure, you had no business to suspend." This opinion was echoed by the great majority of the depositors present, who argued that the bank could lose $100,000, or even more, by Mr. Haigh's failure and still easily pay its depositors, provided its officers had given out a true statement of its affairs. But the loudest complaints made by the depositors were in regard to the suddenness of the closing of the bank. Deposits were received and checks cashed up to within half an hour of the meeting of the Directors on Wednesday, and not a word of warning was given to the bank's customers. One man in the throng told a TIMES reporter that he had deposited $700 in the bank at 3:30 o'clock on that day, and another complained bitterly that the bank had received $2,500 from him after 3 o'clock. Other depositors had similar grievances to relate.

In conversation with a TIMES reporter later in the day Mr. Parham said President Denison made a detailed statement of the present condition of the bank at Wednesday's meeting of the Directors. This statement the Cashier declined to give. Regarding the item of loans and discounts in the December statement, Mr. Parham said he believed the amount of bad paper held by the bank was very small outside of the J. Lloyd Haigh paper. The real estate, valued in the statement at $27,126 61, was, he said, in three pieces, taken for debts. One of these he thought would bring all it was carried for, but he was not certain that the remainder would bring the estimated value if forced for sale. It was not true, Mr. Parham said, that President Denison owned over half of the capital stock of $225,000, although he held a

HIS ARRIVAL AT THE FIFTH-AVENUE HOTEL.

THE ADDRESS OF THE COMMITTEE AND MR. PARNELL'S REPLY—WHAT HE PROPOSES TO DO IN THIS COUNTRY.

The Scythia remained at Quarantine all Thursday night, and came up to her dock at about 10 A. M. yesterday. The Health Officer boarded the steamer about 7, and a short time afterward the Customs revenue cutter came down from the City, having on board a number of the committee which had been organized to extend a welcome to Mr. Charles Stewart Parnell and his companion, Mr. John Dillon. The committee did not, however, go aboard immediately, but allowed the visitors to eat their morning meal without disturbance. There was a good deal of cheering when Mr. Parnell, having finished his breakfast, appeared at the port rail of the Scythia to greet the committee; and immediately afterward the members went aboard, headed by Mr. William E. Robinson and Mr. John E. Develin, who were to present Mr. Parnell with the address of welcome. This ceremony took place in the cabin of the steamer. Ten minutes or so were consumed in informal introductions, handshakings, and conversation. A little space was then cleared, Messrs. Parnell and Dillon stood on one side, Mr. Develin on the other. The contrast between the two Irish gentlemen was very striking. Both are comparatively young men, but Mr. Parnell has a fair skin, blonde beard and hair, slightly inclining to baldness, and his eyes are rather small, dark blue, and keen. Mr. Dillon is swarthy; his hair and whiskers black as night, his eyes large and dark, with a far-away look in them. The expression of his face is almost melancholy; he looks like the ideal visionary and enthusiast. Mr. Parnell, though his countenance has a certain nervous earnestness of expression, gives one the idea of being a practical man. While Mr. Develin read the address, he stood quietly looking on the ground, Mr. Dillon standing behind him, his eyes closed, and a deepened shade of melancholy on his dark features. The address, which was rather long, extended a welcome to the shores of the United States to both gentlemen in the name of Irishmen and Americans; promised a similar welcome from the citizens of other States and cities they might visit in their tour; declared the intention of the signers and those for whom they spoke to extend the moral support of their sympathy and the material aid of their practical exertions; thanked the two gentlemen for the sacrifices they had already made for the cause of patriotism and Christian love, and of the object of Mr. Parnell's mission said: "As we understand, Sir, your mission is an exposition of the state of Ireland—to tell of your own knowledge of the sufferings of the poor; to invoke remedial assistance for distress in the present, and to point out the means by which that distress may not be, as heretofore, a periodic—almost a perennial—affliction. We wait with anxiety your programme of action in these regards."

To this address Mr. Parnell replied as follows:

MR. DEVELIN AND GENTLEMEN: I regret that my power of language is not sufficient to convey to you the very great appreciation of the kindness and honor that you have done me in meeting me this morning, and I feel indebted to you, individually and collectively. It has always been a great pleasure to me to come to the United States of America. I could have wished that the circumstances attending our native land were of a more happy and prosperous character, but we must hope and believe that the time is approaching when we may be able to speak of Ireland as other men speak of their own country, and that we may be able to speak of her as really and truly another nation of the nations of the earth. I have well expressed in your address, Mr. Develin, our task is of a double character. We have to war against the system which produces discontent and suffering in our country, and we have to endeavor to break down that system, and with God's help we are determined to break it down. We have also to see that the victims of this system are not suffered to perish in the meanwhile. We are to take care that the unity and strength of our people are not broken, and that now, when the opportunity has really come for the settlement of one of the leading questions in Ireland, that opportunity may not be lost. The physical sufferings and misery and starvation of large portions of our population in Ireland has not been exaggerated. We have been calling upon the Government for eight months to relieve that distress, but it has only been within the last few days that the English Government has agreed to admit that there is any distress. This was brought to their notice by a letter from the Duchess of Marlborough, the wife of the Lord Lieutenant, which stated that there was going to be a famine and dire distress during the coming Winter. It is what we have warned the Government and our people at home and abroad of for some time, and only now that it is too well spread for almost any effectual remedy do these rulers in England appear to understand at all their responsibility. We who have been working at this great land question, and have prematurely taken the responsibility of the shoulders of the Government, have not up to the present made any appeal to the Government for the relief of the destitution of Ireland. But we feel that we cannot longer shut our eyes to the terrible peril that is approaching, and we think that we ought to put the case before our own countrymen both at home and here in America, and endeavor to enlist their sympathy with our efforts. We believe that in this country the sympathy accorded will be generous and noble, despite the efforts of the English press to depreciate the American nation. We know full well that our countrymen in America will do their duty, as they have in every clime, to their suffering brethren at home. In brief, I confidently anticipate the result of our mission. I believe that the result will be of such a nature as to give pleasure to us and to those who sent us to our people at home. And I can only conclude by again asking you to believe that I thank you most heartily for your great kindness in meeting us on the threshold of America. Again I thank you.

Some applause greeted the close of Mr. Parnell's remarks, and then Mr. Dillon, being called upon, spoke as follows:

"I have also to thank you for the kind way in which you have mentioned my name along with that of the gentleman whom I may call my leader. I cannot avoid saying a word also in thankfulness of the kindly allusion you have made to the memory of my father. We shall always remember the reception which the men of 1848 received in America when we were driven from England, and with my father crossed the Atlantic. He came here to the United States as a felon, with a price set upon his head. He was received in this, the capital of America, not as a felon, but as a gentleman received with honor and respect by the American people, and will add the deference that was due the patriot exile. This I do in the confidence and the hope that this reception which cannot fail to make us feel hopeful that the reception we also shall receive in America, and the feelings with which we shall be met, will be in deed second an sympathy with the Irish people and with the Irish cause. It will not be necessary to say more than a few words after what has been said in answer to your address. There is one thing, however, that I do desire to dwell on, and that is that the chief cause which we have come to promulgate in America is not to collect money to relieve our Irish people. The whole explanation as to the reason why I say this is because, although we shall be most happy to receive any money which American citizens in their generosity may place at our disposal to relieve our people now threatened with starvation, yet we must remember that the famine and the disaster at present hanging over Ireland is entirely beyond the school of private charity. Although it may be deemed a Christian duty to mitigate that fearful calamity from which she is suffering as far as private charity can, we must not lose sight of the fact that it is a calamity with which the Government is bound to deal, and one which no private charity can avert. Living in the West of Ireland I had occasion to come in contact with, and had a fair opportunity of forming an estimate of the probable extent of the calamity, and I have made a rough estimate of its extent—which is, of course, only a guess, and which I believe to be an understatement of the facts. It is that in Ireland we shall have something like 250,000 people without food for from four to five months. Now, in order to prevent starvation and the demoralization consequent upon famine, of which we have had such dire experience in Ireland, it would require two or three millions of money. However generously America may respond—and she always does respond in the most generous manner to charitable appeals—it is beyond reason to expect that anything approaching the sum would be realized. Therefore, I say that the great object which we have in coming to America is to procure sympathy and the assistance of the public opinion of America, and also certain funds to carry on the agitation which is at present progressing in Ireland, by which such pressure will be brought to bear on the British Government that may prevent distress, and, moreover, by that pressure to bring to an end the system which has made our country a miserable exception among the civilized nations of the earth, inasmuch as it would be the only country in the world to be under the order of things, namely, that every 15 or 20 years we must make an appeal to the charity of other nations. No other nation is in such a position, and Irishmen listening to me know that it is not from laziness or idleness or vice of the Irish people or a want of fertility in the Irish soil. We know that it has resulted from the latest and oppressive laws that have been forced upon us, and we know that until they are swept away there will be the unenviable career of our nation. It is unbearable that we should be compelled to live in idleness on alms charity from a nation so generous even as America is, and to expose before another nation the poverty of his people. Therefore, I say, that for my part, I will not be man for any authority other Ireland, but I think it right to add that I am sure that the generosity which I feel will be shown to us, coming from this great destination, we hope to organize in Ireland called the National Land League, which can distribute money more economically and obtain better results than such distribution of any other kind. I may further say that we have been requested by our friends in Ireland to state that we do not think it desirable to open a fund in the different parts of the country, and we think that we can obtain better results by means of these local organizations than in any other way. I merely say in conclusion that the distress that we suffer in Ireland differs from that which has been experienced in other countries. We have not a famine of food. Food is plentiful. But we have a famine of money. Our people have not the money to procure food, although it is plentiful throughout the country. Therefore, the most economical way to diffuse your charity is to do it in money. If the American attempt to send on food to Ireland, £300 worth of food would not do so much to mitigate the pressing wants of the people as £100 in the shape of money. I will conclude by saying that our chief task is to state the case of Ireland clearly, concisely, before the American people. What has been working harm to some extent to our cause in America is the pernicious misrepresentation of the English press, and which I am bound to say on this occasion has excelled all its performances of the past, and in view of this it is our duty to see that Ireland's cause does not suffer in America in the public estimation. [Applause.]

After the speech of Mr. Dillon, Mr. Develin informed Mr. Parnell that a Chicago delegation was in waiting to present him with an address, which was read by Mr. M. E. Stone, whose associates were John E. Finnerty and J. J. Fitzgibbon. Mr. Stone also said a few words expressive of the gratification he and those he represented felt at the coming of Mr. Parnell and their hearty sympathy with his mission. The address, engrossed on parchment, was dated from the "Head-quarters of the Irish Land Reform and Aid Committee," at the Sherman House, Chicago. It extended an invitation to Mr. Parnell, and any one associated with him, to visit Chicago at their earliest convenience, and welcomed that gentleman to America in the name of the Northwestern States as the champion of the agricultural population of Ireland in the struggle against unjust laws; as the acknowledged representative of the Irish nation in its contest with landlord usurpation maintained by the armed forces of the British Government.

After the formal speech-making was over, Mr. Parnell held an estimated conversation with a number of reporters who surrounded him. He spoke of his object in coming, the probable length of his stay, and his plans. As to the report which has been circulated that the British Government had sent reporters here to take down his utterances, Mr. Parnell expressed his doubt whether this had been done. He did not believe that Government would take any notice of what he said here, and if it did, he thought nothing would come of it. Of the length of his stay here he was uncertain. He was not going back merely for the opening of Parliament, but his return would be hastened if, for instance, the Government tried to suspend the Habeas Corpus act or renew the Peace Preservation act, if Parliaments were dissolved, or if Mr. Davitt were convicted. He did not, however, expect that the latter event would occur. If not recalled by any of the circumstances he had mentioned, he should try to go to as many of the principal cities as possible, and should visit both the South and the West. He intended also to go to Canada. To the question whether he came in any official capacity, Mr. Parnell replied that he did; he had been sent by the National Land League, and Mr. Dillon was also a delegate from that body. In his speeches he should feel chiefly with the land question, but he should have something to say on their Parliamentary policy—the "Obstructionist" policy—which, he added, had been much misrepresented. Mr. Parnell said he had received a number of invitations to the United States, but for the present he was entirely in the hands of the New-York committee, and had made no arrangements. He had been told this morning that the arrangement had been made for him to speak to-morrow in this City.

Mr. Parnell talked freely about his threatened arrest, about the way the English and, to some extent, the American press had misrepresented him, and upon any other topic brought up, and meanwhile the Scythia approached her dock, and there came aboard accompanied by some friends, Mr. Parnell's three sisters who reside with their mother at Bordentown, N. J. At the dock the party took carriages, and drove to the Fifth-Avenue Hotel, where, in Parlor F, Mr. Parnell and Mr. Dillon held a reception which lasted for about two hours. After this the Reception Committee proper held a meeting, Mr. Develin in the chair, and appointed a sub-committee of six to receive visitors, to whom Mr. Parnell might get some rest after the fatigues of the voyage. The main committee then adjourned till evening, to meet at the Astor House to perfect the details for the meeting of Sunday evening, in Madison-Square Garden.

THE BELLEVUE HOSPITAL BLUNDER

TRYING TO FIND OUT THE TRUTH IN THE CASE OF THOMSEN.

The case of Charles Thomsen, news-dealer, of No. 66 Clinton-street, who died in the insane department of Bellevue Hospital on the 9th ult., and whose body was sent to the Medical College and there dissected without the consent or knowledge of his wife, was up for investigation yesterday afternoon before the Commissioners of Charities and Correction. The investigation, so far as it went, showed that the outrage was not in any wise due to the system of handling bodies of the dead at the hospital, but entirely to the criminal carelessness of one or two officers. Thomsen had been adjudicated insane by Dr. Hardy, the examiner in lunacy, and his transfer to Ward's Island was ordered. Before sending him over he was confined in a ward, according to the rule of the institution, for two weeks, so that his disposition could be ascertained, and he could be properly classified in the asylum. During this interval no visitors are allowed to see a lunatic, and Mr. Thomsen's case he died before its termination at 5 o'clock A. M. on Dec. 9. The orderly of the ward sent due notice of the death to both Albert White, Keeper of the Morgue, and to the clerk, De Leyer. De Leyer's duty was to see that Abraham Quinn, Morgue Messenger, left due notice of the death with the friends of the deceased, if he had any, or at his last place of residence. De Leyer testified that he is positive he made out the notice, and saw that Quinn got it. White's duty was to deliver the body to such friends as called for it, to see that it was buried in Potter's Field if none called, or to transfer it to the college for dissection, upon the proper legal demand. He testified that when he got the death notice he called Quinn's attention to it; that the latter went away, and in about an hour returned and reported that the dead man had "no friends." He so entered the case upon his books, and the college making application for the body, he delivered it to them. When he learned of the blunder that had been committed he told the dead man's wife, to save her feelings, that his body had been buried in Potter's Field on the 12th. He then recovered the mutilated remains, and had them buried in the City Cemetery on the 13th, so as to keep Mrs. Thomsen unaware of the truth that would be so terrible to her. White showed that he had to depend altogether on the reports of Quinn for the disposition of bodies. Quinn testified positively that he never got a notice of Thomsen's death, and exhibited his entries for the day to prove it. An adjournment was then had until 4 o'clock next Tuesday afternoon, when other witnesses will be examined.

THE NEW RECORDER.

CHANGES TO BE MADE—TAMMANY POLITICIANS LOOKING FOR PAP.

Recorder Smyth visited the office of the Clerk of the Court of General Sessions yesterday, and had a long conversation with Mr. John Sparks, the veteran Clerk. Judge Gildersleeve, subsequently met the new Recorder, but Judge Cowing was prevented by indisposition from being present. The Judges talked over the assignments for the ensuing year, and it was agreed that Recorder Smyth should not sit until the middle of January, as he wished time to settle up his private business. Judge Cowing has offered to sit for the Recorder until such time as the latter is ready to begin his judicial duties.

The Tammany politicians are already squabbling over the patronage which falls to the lot of the new Judge. A Deputy Clerk, with a salary of $5,000 per year, and 12 court attendants, at $1,200 a year each, is the bone over which the district leaders are quarrelling. The Aldermen who voted for Mr. Smyth's appointment expect, of course, to be remembered in the matter of patronage, and it is probable that the distribution of the appointments will have to be settled by John Kelly. A number of prominent Tammany politicians are already working up influence to secure the Deputy Clerkship—a position held for over 10 years by the present incumbent, Mr. Edward H. Hall. The Judges may, in consideration of his ability, retain Mr. Hall; but, in view of the hot fight for his position, such action seems improbable. The name of Recorder Hackett's 12 appointees, whose removal is only a matter of a few days, are Henry McCloskey, the veteran Captain, and Messrs. Wilkes, Cole, Knight, Evans, O'Connor, Hall, Flanagan, O'Neill, Ryan, McConnell, and Ball. At the opening of the General Sessions Court on Monday such suitable action will be taken on the death of the late Recorder. The Bench of Part I. will be draped in mourning, and suitable resolutions of regret and sympathy will be in readiness for action. Invitations have been sent to the surviving ex-Judges of the court and ex-District Attorneys, as well as to prominent members of the Bar. Among those expected to be in attendance are ex-Judge Beebe, the first Judge of the court; ex-Recorder Smith, and ex-Judges Sutherland and Bedford. The ex-District Attorneys expected are John McKeon and A. Oakey Hall. Eulogistic addresses will be delivered by District Attorney Phelps, who will probably be followed by William A. Beach, Richard O'Gorman, and William F. Kinsing. Judge Gildersleeve will reply on behalf of the Bench, and both parts of the court will adjourn for the day as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased jurist.

WHO IS TO GET THE SALARY?

Mayor Cooper, Comptroller Kelly, and the Treasurer of the Board of Police were served yesterday with copies of the decisions of Judge Westbrook and of the Supreme Court, General Term, in the case of ex-Police Commissioner Sydney P. Nicholby, by the counsel of the latter, Mr. John D. Townsend. The decisions were accompanied with a peremptory demand for payment of salary to Police Commissioner Charles F. McLean, the successor to Mr. Nicholby in the office. Neither the Mayor nor the Comptroller, however, has any power on the subject, and it is not improbable that the Board will be compelled to order the Police Department to pay over monthly, and the Police Board alone can withhold or reduce the salary of any of its members.

ROMANCE OF LAW AND WAR

A GEORGIA GUARDIAN AND HIS ALABAMA WARDS.

HOW THE WAR AFFECTED THEIR RELATIONS—HE PLEADS THAT THEY WERE ALL REBELS ALIKE—A LOYAL JUDGE GIVING JUSTICE TO THE DISLOYAL CITIZEN.

In December, 1855, Gazaway B. Lamar, a well-known and wealthy merchant of Georgia then temporarily residing on Staten Island, was appointed by the Surrogate of Richmond County guardian of the estate of Anna C. Sims, a little girl 4 years of age, who was a native and resident of the State of Alabama, but who was also then temporarily living on Staten Island. About the same time also he was similarly appointed, by the same authority, and at the same place, guardian of the estate of Anna's sister, Martha M. Sims, who was then 6 years old. The guardian, Mr. Lamar, was the same man who for many years after the war figured prominently in suits against the Government for the recovery of large sums of money for cotton seized, confiscated, and sold during the rebellion. He recovered in one instance, too, before the Court of Claims at Washington, a judgment for over $500,000, and several contingent suits are still pending in the courts. He and his wards are now dead, the guardian having died three or four years ago, while the sister Martha died almost on the threshold of womanhood, in 1864, at the age of 15, and Anna a few years ago, when she was about 25 years old. Mr. Lamar's guardianship of the interests of his young wards is now the subject of an almost romantic and decidedly important action at law, which has just been tried and decided before Judge Choate, sitting in the United States Circuit Court. The suit was originally commenced in the Supreme Court of this State and County by Anna against C. De Rossett Lamar, who is the Executor of Gazaway B., deceased. The action was transferred to the Federal courts by the defendant Executor, but Anna died not long afterward, and the suit was revived by her aunt, Mrs. Mary J. C. Micon, as Anna's Administratrix and next of kin. The complaint alleges the appointment of Mr. Lamar as guardian, and that in January, 1856, he took possession of the property of his infant ward, Anna, being more than $6,000 in money and other property, and that he never rendered any accounting of the property so intrusted to him, although it was demanded of him by her after she became of age. As a defense to the action, the answer alleges that the defendant's testator was a resident and citizen of Georgia, and the infant Anna a resident and citizen of Alabama, both temporarily only living in this State; that in the year 1861 the two States named declared themselves to have seceded from the Union, and to have become a portion of the Confederate States of America, whereupon a state of war arose between the United States and the Confederacy; that both the guardian and his ward were, in the Spring of 1861, citizens and residents of the Confederate States, they having returned respectively to Georgia and Alabama in 1856 and both were engaged in aiding and abetting the rebellion against the United States, and so continued to do until January, 1865; that the United States, by various public acts, declared the property of all persons in rebellion, including Anna and her guardian, to be liable to seizure and confiscation, and debarred them from access to any court in the United States, whereby it became impossible for Mr. Lamar, as guardian, to appear in the Surrogate's Court, Richmond County, to settle the accounts with his ward and be duly discharged from his liability, and thereupon and by reason of the relation between the guardian and ward ceased. As a further defense, it is alleged that, in order to save Anna's funds from seizure and confiscation, her guardian, Lamar, at the request of herself and of her natural guardians—her uncle and aunt, the Micons—withdrew all her property, which was invested in Newark, New-Jersey, and reinvested the funds in such securities as by the laws of Alabama, Georgia, and the Confederate States it was lawful and proper for him to invest them in, being bonds and stocks of cities and railroads within the Confederacy, and that afterward Anna's uncle, Benjamin F. Sims, was duly appointed by a probate court in Alabama, and that the Guardian Lamar accounted to the new guardian for, and paid over to him, all of the estate of the decedent ward with which he was chargeable, and that it was ratified and approved by Anna and her natural guardians.

A similar action was brought by Anna against her former guardian to recover on the estate of her deceased sister, Martha, Anna being her Administratrix as next of kin. The complaint and action in that case were identical with those in the other suit in all material respects, but it is further answered that all the rights of Martha vested at once upon her death, and that the settlement with the new guardian, Micon, discharged Lamar from all liability as guardian of Martha's estate. Afterward, cross-suits were brought in the United States Circuit Court by the defendant against the present plaintiff, Mrs. Micon, setting up the same defenses as were made in the original suits, and further averring that Mrs. Micon, as sole legatee under the will of Anna, had ratified all the acts done in Anna's behalf, and was, therefore, estopped from denying that those acts were proper and legal. In her answer to these cross-suits, Mrs. Micon denies that she was one of the natural guardians of the minor sisters, her nieces, and denies the alleged ratification of Guardian Lamar's acts. The four suits were tried together before Judge Choate, upon an agreed statement of facts, and yesterday he delivered his elaborate decision, embodying in it the facts above stated, together with the legal conclusions of the court on this somewhat remarkable complication of circumstances and transactions.

Judge Choate holds that on the trial the cause of action alleged in the original complaints is fully sustained by the admitted facts, unless the matters alleged in the answer are, if sustained by the evidence, valid defenses for the guardian. The first ground of defense insisted on is that by the war the relation of guardian and ward was terminated, and hence it is argued that though the former guardian, Lamar, continued, and held the trust and estate of which he had received as guardian, yet that he no longer held them as guardian under the laws of this State; that the guardian and ward having both acquired new domiciles out of this State, and within the territory of which, in terms, least perhaps, they became enemies and a hostile State, their personal and domestic relation was thereby broken, and did not revive when the war ceased, and that the guardian was, therefore, no longer accountable to the courts of New-York as guardian, even after the close of the war. On this question Judge Choate quotes and adopts the strong and able decision assumed, so far as concerns the care and safe-keeping of the property of the ward in the hands of the guardian, and his liability to account for it after the war was over. Doubtless, during the war, if the ward or guardian had remained here, and his ward had become an alien enemy, the duties of guardian would be modified by that fact. He could not remit funds for her support to any person in the hostile territory, but he would still be under the same obligation as before as to the safe-keeping of the property, and whenever the ward ceased to be an alien enemy by the termination of the war there was no legal obstacle to her calling the guardian to an account for the property so held. Even if the war dissolved the relation, the offices of such distinction would not be present; there would be notice of the termination of the guardianship by the death of the ward; and, if the ward had died before the war began, the guardian must still account to her legal representative. The case of a separation between citizens of hostile States being dissolved by war, as cited by the defense, the court thinks is not analogous, and if it were would not touch this question. The guardian undertook certain trusts under his bond. It certainly is no answer for him to say that of his own free will he made himself an active enemy of the United States and of the State of New-York, and thereby discharged himself from the obligation thus assumed under the laws of New-York. Yet this is what the defense amounts to so far as it rests on his becoming a resident of Georgia, and as such engaging in war against the United States. So far as this defense rests on the ward's being an alien enemy, her right to call him to an accounting of his guardianship, assumed before the war, was suspended—not annulled—by the war. In the case of Insurance Company against Davis, the Supreme Court of the United States has held that an agent is required to keep the property of his principal, being in his possession, safely during the war, and to restore it faithfully at its close. If this be so of an agent, it must with equal force be held to apply to a guardian. Nor can a guardian better his position in this respect by himself voluntarily going into rebellion, as this guardian went from New-York to Georgia to join in the rebellion. He could not by his own act relieve himself of his liability, except by the complete discharge of his duty.

The second defense is to the effect that the guardian, to prevent the confiscation of his ward's money, withdrew it from its investment in bank stock in New-York and sent it to Montreal, where it was and remained invested, under his direction, in certain stocks and bonds legalized by rebel States. This point is clearly untenable. The new investments were not such as he was allowed to make under the laws of this State, and they were obviously extra-hazardous. They are not to be justified on the plea that if the funds remained here, invested according to law, they would be liable to be confiscated by the United States. It is no part of the duty of a guardian under his oath and bond to protect his ward's money against the lawful demands of his own Government. If undertaken lawful demands they were seized, the guardian would be no longer responsible for them. His duty as a citizen to interpose no obstruction to the efforts of his own Government in carrying on the war is his first duty, and is superior to any obligation he owes his ward. Moreover, the proofs show that what he did was under color of protecting his ward's interests, to allow the funds to be loaned to cities and other corporations which were aiding in the rebellion, and by this very act set up in excuse, he himself gave aid and comfort to the enemies of his Government. Such an act could not be pleaded in justification, even if it were shown to be lawful, even if the circumstances warranted the removal of the funds to avoid confiscation, which clearly they did not. A third ground of defense is the transfer of what remained of the funds, in 1867, to the new guardian in Alabama, and its alleged release therefrom and thereby from liability. To this the plaintiff objected that a new guardian could not legally be appointed until the former guardian had been removed or suspended. This objection the court holds to be untenable in this instance because the laws of Georgia were not in force in the Alabama jurisdiction, and there might be several guardians in several different jurisdictions if the infant had property within the limits of each which required guardianship. These infants in 1856 became domiciled in Alabama with their relatives, and the power of the courts there to provide for the care of the infants' estates in Alabama would not be questioned, and the transfer of funds to the guardian appointed in the new domicile might very properly be authorized by the court to which the former guardian was accountable. In this case Mr. Lamar requested the relatives of the ward to invite the appointment of a new guardian, his reasons being his age, his growing infirmities, and his own business cares and perplexities, and the appointment was made in conformity with his request. Such reasons would doubtless have been sufficient if the application had been made to the Richmond County Surrogate. But when would this have been approved as right and just if asked for, cannot now be justified as done for the benefit of the ward. The defendant's testator, therefore, should be credited with the cash payment of $808 to the new guardian, but the transaction referred to as a release of the former guardian by the new guardian cannot neither purported to be a release, nor could it be so understood or intended by the parties, of his liability to account for and pay over the residue of the infant's estate with which he was chargeable. The new guardian merely gave a receipt for sundry securities, mostly worthless, which were turned over to him. They were the remains of the investment which he had made of the ward's property. It is too plain to need argument that the new guardian had no power to accept a transfer of such property as a full discharge of the former guardian's liability to account for and make good the moneys originally received by him. Such an act would be a gross abuse of the trust by the new guardian, and no court would authorize or justify it. On the question of the ratification of the defendant's testator's acts by the ward Anna and her natural guardians, and of the existence of such relations between Anna and them, in any legal sense, as well as the good intentions of the former guardian in taking the course he did to protect his ward, the court holds adversely to the defendant, and on the latter point particularly, while admitting his good intent toward her, says he took the risk of investing the funds in a manner not allowed by law, and must therefore make good the amounts received, with interest, the sum to be determined by a referee and accounting. The court, therefore, grants a decree for the accounting in the original suits, and dismisses the bill in the cross-suits, with costs.

BURIAL OF CHARLES COUDERT.

HIS THREE SONS AND SON-IN-LAW THE PALL-BEARERS.

Funeral services over the body of Charles Coudert, the old Napoleonic officer, and father of Coudert Brothers, the well-known lawyers, were held yesterday morning in the little chapel attached to Seton Hall, at South Orange, N. J. Early trains from this City carried numbers of ladies and gentlemen who had known and honored the veteran in the twilight of his life-time. Mourning emblems were displayed in the chapel during the services, which consisted of a solemn requiem mass. Bishop Corrigan, of the Diocese of Newark, officiated as celebrant, assisted by Fathers Salome and Chandle as deacon and subdeacon respectively. Several other priests were within the altar-railing. The congregation, which was a large one, included Mr. Eugene Kelly and family, Mr. William H. Guion, Mrs. Clement Guion, Mr. Thorne, Mr. Claiborne Ferris, Mr. Warren Ferris, Mr. Edward Pattison, Mr. George V. Hecker, Dr. Richardson, of Orange; Mr. Sahuyler Boyd, Mrs. Caroline M. Seymour, Mr. Walter R. Jones, and Miss Lacrabee. As the organ pealed forth plaintive funeral strains, the coffin containing the body of the old hero was borne into the church by his three sons, Frederick R., Charles and L. L. Coudert, and his son-in-law, Paul Fuller. The coffin was of oak covered with black cloth and ornamented with silver handles. On the plate was engraved a cross, beneath which was the inscription:

CHARLES COUDERT,
Born December 27, 1793,
Died December 31, 1879.

The body was dressed in plain black. During the progress of the mass Mrs. Barilli gave a beautiful rendering of an appropriate solo, and an address was delivered by Bishop Corrigan, whose utterances were at times made inaudible by excess of emotion. Speaking from the text "Honor thy father," the Bishop said that many of those present had been in some time eye-witnesses of the devoted manner in which the family of the dead man had obeyed the Scriptural injunction. His greatest recompense in this life was a large share of filial devotion. Among all the pleasures of his active and varied life, he valued none more than the affection, respect, and devotion of his family. To the faithful sons, who were now bearing his earthly remains to their last resting place, all honor was due for their perfect obedience to the will of their aged father. Bishop Corrigan alluded, in highly eulogistic terms, to the great piety of the dead man, which last attribute, the preacher said, was contracted while he was attending divine service. After the services, the body was brought to this City by train, and thence to Calvary Cemetery. Only the members of the family accompanied it to the grave.

THE MANHATTAN MARKET.

COMPARISON OF PRICES OF SUPPLIES IN NEW-YORK AND IN PARIS.

Rumors have been in circulation for some time that a combination has been effected by the present owners of the Manhattan Market, at the foot of Thirty-fourth-street, North River, with the intention of utilizing that property for the purposes for which the building was originally erected, namely, as a great distributing depot for the food supplies of the City, and it is probable that an effort will soon be made to give the project the elements of success by enlisting the interests of the market men, wholesale and retail, and the large consumers, such as hotel and restaurant proprietors, in the practical realization of the scheme. The history of this scheme is too familiar to need recapitulation. On Monday evening, Nov. 11, 1872, the building was opened with a popular concert that attracted about 30,000 people, which, as a small admission fee was exacted, may be taken as a sufficient indication of the interest in the removal of our market business to more eligible quarters. This was just previous to the collapse of the Tweed Ring, with the members of which the scheme was supposed to have originated, and by whom, at least, it was cordially supported. The loss of this powerful support, combined with the opposition of a political combine then controlling Washington, brought down the Manhattan Market project to sudden grief. The managers having started the enterprise in debt, builders' liens served upon the tenants, litigation, and political intrigue did the rest, and the new market was prostrated by the clamor of public and private creditors.

Recent attempts to describe the nuisance which Washington Market has become, and recent agitation looking to the sale of the Washington and Fulton Market properties for the benefit of the City, have led to a revival of the scheme which terminated so disastrously seven years ago, and to a careful examination of the advantages to be derived from a removal up town of our market facilities. The building, 600 feet in length, comprising an area of 160,000 square feet, covered by an immense iron roof, occupies the whole square bounded by Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth streets, and Eleventh and Twelfth avenues. Its original cost, exclusive of the land, was $1,200,000. A bulkhead, 200 by 100 feet, on the North River, belongs to the property, and there are 14 vacant lots on Thirty-fifth-street and Eleventh-avenue, which can be controlled for the laying out of a plaza for the accommodation of market wagons, while the two piers at the foot of Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth streets furnish abundant shipping facilities.

The promoters of this scheme offer some statistics in relation to its advantages, which are of popular interest. In Paris, with the market arrangements now in operation, it costs $24 to distribute every $100 worth of table supplies. In Philadelphia the cost of distribution is 45 per centum. The first cost of meat and vegetables in New-York, independent of distribution, is only 91 per centum of their first cost in Paris. That is, $91 in New-York is equivalent to $100 in Paris as respects the actual cost of raising and delivering table supplies within city limits. But so inconvenient, complex, and unwieldy are our arrangements for distribution to the consumer, as compared with those of Paris, that while the Paris housekeeper has to pay only $24 on every $100 for distribution, his New-York compeer pays $103 80 to carmen, wholesalers, retailers, and middlemen generally, on every $100 worth of table supplies that passes through Washington Market, thus raising the cost of living to a higher figure than that which prevails in any great American or European city.

A LONELY WOMAN'S DEATH.

A black-haired woman, about 24 years old, was found dead yesterday in a front room on the first floor of the tenement-house No. 539 Sixth-street. She had on the 15th ult. hired the room of Mrs. Becker, an inmate of the house, and had paid 50 cents on account of rent. Mrs. Becker did not ask her name, and troubled herself little about the woman and the rent. It was, however, remarked that the new lodger was shy, and that she was visited by a tall man with red whiskers. She was last seen alive on Saturday. Yesterday a woman whose name was not asked called at the tenement-house and rapped at the lodger's door. It was not opened, and the caller told Mrs. Becker that she wanted Mrs. Blair. After the woman had gone Mrs. Becker called in a policeman. Once had certainly been drunk, and the door was full of vile whisky. Mrs. Blair was neatly dressed in an alpaca dress and ulster. Several pawn tickets were found in the room. They were for articles of apparel pledged for small amounts. Some drops of blood on the floor and some bloody water in a bowl afforded a sensational theory in regard to the cause of death, but Mrs. Blair's mouth was bloody, and it is probable that the died of hemorrhage of the lungs. There were no marks of violence on the body, and an autopsy will be made today. The Police were unable to find any relatives. It is said that her husband was a ship-carpenter, who died a drunkard nine months ago, and that she learned to drink from him.
